by Nancy Duncan "They live in Pelham and they ought to be allowed to go to school here."

That's the attitude of Pelham city officials and some others on a situation which has students in the Keystone and King Valley areas of the city attending Alabaster and Helena schools.

Keystone begins just south of the Pelham Post Office and extends to Alabaster city limits, while the King Valley area is about a mile west of Hwy. 31, off County Road 52.

District lines, established some years ago to comply with Federal court orders, have a number of students who live in these areas of Pelham going to schools other than Valley Elementary and Pelham High, both of which are within Pelham's city limits.

Pelham Mayor Paul Yeager, Sr. has stated on numerous occasions that he feels these pupils should attend school in their hometown, especially in view of the fact that the city furnishes garbage collection and water to both schools at no cost. Yeager estimates that this service saves the county $300 a month for water and another $200 for garbage pick-up at the two schools.

Shelby County Education Superintendent Elvin Hill, in explaining how the controversial lines were established. said that in complying with court orders, the county Department of Education followed the lines which were already being observed in the area.

"In practically all situations, the lines were drawn where the buses went," he said. "If there were any district lines changed, I don't know about it."

Students in the Keystone area were assigned to the Thompson schools in Alabaster before Pelham was incorporated, Hill continued. Then, when district lines were drawn, school buses observed these lines in transporting students from that area to Alabaster, although for a while, when a "freedom of choice" plan for school attendance was in effect, parents could transport their children to schools outside their districts.

What the county department did, when edicts were handed down stating that district lines must be observed. Hill said, was to follow the lines which had already been established. Once these were approved, he explained, it became the county's responsibility to see that they were

However, Pelham councilman Burk Dunaway, contends that the county board has made an exception to the previously established lines by allowing students in Brookfield subdivision in Pelham to attend local schools, and for this reason, he isn't buying the idea that the county can't make an exception to district division.

Hill, on the other hand, said that Brookfield was changed after a census indicated it should be in the Helena school area. He said that a review of the map used to show district lines revealed that Bearden Road (County Road 105), where the subdivision is located, was not specified on the map and for this reason, the lines were redefined, putting the area in the Pelham school district.

Hill emphasized that the board's decision was not an exception to its policy of enforcing district assignments, but rather, a redefinition of where the lines were supposed to be. He pointed out that students in the area had attended Valley School since the area became populated, so no change was affected by the new interpretation.

Dunaway also maintains that a delegation which approached the Board of Education last Fall about the situation was told that youngsters in the King Valley area could "probably" be allowed to change and attend Pelham schools. This, he said, further convinces him that exceptions can be made in the present district assignments.

Hill said he does not recall hearing anyone tell the group that such an exception might be made. "There was a lot of discussion," he added, "but nothing like that got into Dunaway said the delegation was told to wait until the results of a school survey by the State Department of Education were known to see what the survey teams recommendations might be. However, the survey did not include any studies concerning school district assignemnts, as the staff's recommendations were limited to projections of future educational needs in the county.

According to Dunaway, many parents in the Keystone and King Valley areas prefer to send their children to one of the two Pelham schools. Hill and members of the Board of Education, reiterate their claim that lines established by the board and approved by Federal courts are, at this point, unchangeable.

Hill said further that if citizens in these areas feel strongly enough to pursue the matter, "it would take a court decision" to alter the matter.

INSPECTING WRECKED 'CYCLE - . Harpersville Police Chief T.E. Johnson and motorcycle owner William Paul Horner of Vincent are pictured inspecting damage done to the 1973 Honda when Arthur Franklin Turner who had taken the motorcycle for a trial run was in collision with a motor home driven by Norman Rutledge of Cullman. The accident occurred at 2:30 Monday afternoon on Highway 231 northeast of Vincent. Turner, who was considering buying the motorcycle at the time of the incident was taken to Shelby Memorial Hospital with lacerations. Rutledge, driver of the motor home, told the Reporter that the motorcycle turned in front of him as he was driving north on Highway 231.

Spongy hair is limp and dull. You can see it most clearly when the hair is wet because it becomes gummy and mushy, and also stretches more easily (giving you lots of broken ends). This condition can be caused by overcoloring, too strong a perm, or too much straightening. Harsh, highly detergent shampoos will create spongy hair as well. To correct the problem at home, try using an acid-balanced shampoo your beauty salon can recommend one. #### Current legislature shows independence

The current special session of the Legislature is scheduled to end today, and if it did nothing else, it proved that this legislature is a pretty independent bunch, for better or worse.

There wasn't much hope among administration supporters here last week that the governor's package of eight bills aimed at utility rate control would pass. At least there wasn't much hope that they would pass in a recognizable form.

It should be remembered at the outset that the governor said, when he opened this special legislative session, that the bills didn't hold out any immediate hope

That was a politician's way of saying that the bills wouldn't bring a cut in utility rates anytime soon, if they all passed exactly as they were introduced.

On Tuesday of last week the administration got the message, loud and clear. It came, not on a vote to pass one of the bills, but on a motion to table a proposed amendment to the first bill in the package - the one which would prohibit an automatic rate increase in unlity rates when fuels costs go up.

Twenty-one senators voted against the motion to table and three more, who were temporarily off the floor or absent that day, would have also voted against it. Only 11 members out of the 35 voted with the governor by trying to table the amendment.

It was the real "test vote" by which forces on one side of a question or other can determine how the wind is blowing. For the governor that day, the wind was out of the north and it was very cold.

It appears at this writing that the Senate will amend the other bills and send them back to the House, which will refuse to go along with the amendments, necessitating a conference committee.

One of the most interesting factors in the entire session will be which senators Lt. Gov. Jere Beasley assigns to the conference committee.

If they are all senators who voted against the governor, Beasley will face the charge that he was repaying the power company for its help in his 1974 runoff

If they are all senators who voted with the governor, then Beasley will possibly be incurring the wrath of the people who helped him win a second term and who he might reasonably expect to support him for governor in

All in all, the session will prove that utility rates is something that can't really be legislated. That's the reason for the Public Service Commission in the first place.

And the sessions seems to have proved, or re-proved, a business axiom which says that when the cost of production goes up, so does the cost of the product.

Utility bills should go down this month, because of the in-between weather, when neither heating or air conditioning are really necessary. But come late May and June, when those air conditioning machines begin coming into full time use, and electric bills are probably going to go out of sight.

That could produce a new spate of letters to the governor, protesting the high rates, which are what prompted this session in the first place.

There is no. simple answer to the energy crisis, only intelligent choices. And the long-suffering public is evidently going to have to choose between high utility bills or a lot of perspiration.

It wouldn't be at all surprising to see a real run on attic fans and room fans this summer. Sales of roof ventilators ought to be strong.

But one thing is certain, utility bills will not be lower until Alabamians start using less electricity.

U.S. Senate honors Gen. Robert E. Lee

by Senator Jim Allen

A few days ago, acting in an unusual spirit of amity and respect, the United States Senate approved a Senate Joint Resolution restoring posthumously full rights of citizenship to General Robert E. Lee. This is a proposal which has had my full support since it was first introduced five years ago.

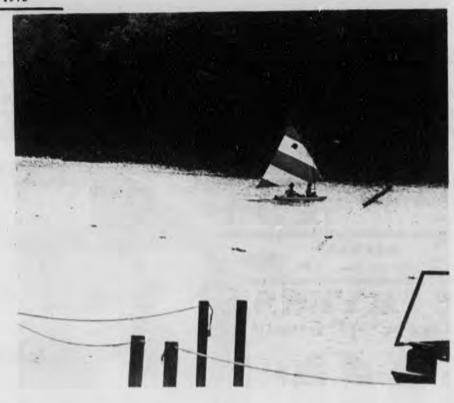

It may seem strange to some that such an action was deemed necessary so long after the death of this great American. But fate, in its peculiar way, has for all of these years denied General Lee one of the most important desires of his life, the restoration to him of full United States Citizenship, a right which had been taken from him as the result of the War Between the States.

General Lee sought this action himself some 110 years ago. On June 13, 1865, this revered Virginian formally applied for full restoration of his rights of citizenship. This application was personally approved by General Ullyses S. Grant and was sent to the President through the Secretary of War. During its tenuous course through the Federal bureaucracy, the application was held up supposedly because it was not accompanied by a required notarized oath of allegiance. Immediately upon learning of this need, General Lee took the necessary oath before a notary public. But the oath was not properly forwarded and the restoration of rights of citizenship ws never made to

Then, in 1970 -- 105 years after General Robert E. Lee had taken the oath -- the missing document was discovered among papers stored in the National Archives. It was the finding of this request by General Lee and proof of his compliance with the law that resulted in the five year effort to gain the Senate's approval of the Resolution to restore his citizenship effective on the day in June 110 years ago when he filed the request originally with General Grant.

Americans of all sections and views have long recognized General Lee's outstanding virtues of courage, patriotism, and selfless devotion to duty and his unmatched contributions in helping heal the wounds of War. He was a man of conscience and principle by whose example our once splintered nation was ultimately brought together in a spirit of tolerance and respect and forgiveness. I believe that General Lee is one of the three greatest Americans, the other two being Thomas Jefferson and Abraham Lincoln. Thousands of Americans in every one of the 50 States have, during the past five years, given support to our efforts to restore citizenship to General Lee. I find it refreshing that even in the midst of today's debate over such issues as Vietnam, Cambodia, and domestic economy, the energy crisis, higher prices, inflation, recession, the United States Senate can pause and take time to honor General Robert E. Lee, an outstanding Southerner and one of America's greatest citizens.

OAK MT. PARK- Need we say more? Let the pictures tell the story on page B-9.

Can you really prove you were born?

Was your birth registered? Unless you have documentation you'll get nowhere protesting as Will Rogers once did: "I can't prove I was born, but you can't deny I'm here."

A total of 320,899 persons in the United States who found themselves in that predicament in 1974 turned to the U.S. Bureau of the Census for help. (The Bureau is part of the U.S. Department of Commerce's Social and Economic Statistics Administration.)

More than two-thirds of applicants receiving help from the Census Bureau in 1974 lived in 11 southern states: Georgia, South Carolina, North Carolina, Alabama, Mississippi, Tennessee, Louisiana, Virginia, Arkansas, Florida, and Texas.

Persons unable to obtain a birth certificate may have been born before 1920, before birth registration became mandatory in every state. Or their birth record may have been accidentally destroyed by flood or fire, or simply never recorded. Or they may have been unable to obtain a delayed birth certificate because they couldn't lay their hands on acceptable evidence of their birth such as a baptismal certificate, a family Bible in which their birth was chronicled, or an affidavit from the attending doctor or midwife.

Every ten years in years ending in zero, as you know, the Bureau of the Census takes a population census, gathering facts about every human being in the country. Realizing how valuable this information might be to anybody called upon to prove his existence, the Bureau wisely established its Personal Census Service Branch, more commonly known as the Age Search Branch, which will send anyone who applies for it a transcript of his own census record from the census year that will best serve his

For example, a man born in 1905 who wants certification of his age would probably be sent a copy of his census record from the decennial census of 1910. The record would not contain his birth date, but it would show

Cooper finds spring

Ah, Spring! It's here again. My old buddy whom I give up for lost every winter as the weather gets colder and wetter with gray days and frosty nights, is back. I can now recall those frigid evenings with the chilling winds slicing under my front door and chucle. The mornings I would go out to my car when I forgot to put it in the garage overnight and find a heavy coating of ice on the windshield are just a distant memory. I glance past my heavy coats in the closet without a second thought as I look for a pair of bermuda shorts.

It doesn't matter that the official Spring arrived several weeks ago. Disregard the fact that yards have already been alive with color from azalea bushes long before my discovery that Spring has arrived. All of this was sham. Winter had not turned loose.

In a fit of creativity three weeks ago, I went out and bought azalea bushes and rose bushes to plant in my yard. The azaleas already had pretty little blooms on them. I cut through all of the curious growth that was lining my front steps and dug out holes to drop my flowers in, deposited them and patted the dirt back around them gently. Then I waited for all of these magnificant pink and white blooms to burst forth and brighten up my yard.

What burst forth was winter again. It had been lurking around the corner, watching me dig happily in the ground. After drenching my helpless little flowers with a frog-strangling rais, winter marched out from its hiding place and sat on them. The one bush that had small white blossoms immediately turned brown. The others just looked around and refused to make any effort at all to grow. I can't blame them. If I had my feet stuck in cold, wet ground when I was seven years old, I doubt if I would have grown much either.

My rose bushes are presently a complete loss. They look like sets of antlers from a very old, tired moose.

But help has arrived. Spring has leg-wrestled Winter into submission. I know that this is Spring and not just some bit of chicanery designed to get me to set out more flowers. Things smell like Spring this time.

I was coming in late the other night and I noticed something unusual. I could smell the grass, It was a clean, fresh, green scent. And some flowers somewhere in my back yard is releasing its perfume in a fit of joy because its roots are once again warm. I can leave my car out overnight and the windshield is dry and clean in the morning.

And most of all, I can tell by the birds. During the winter, I toss bread crumbs out my back door on a regular basis and the birds in the neighborhood have come to expect it. If the crumbs aren't there, they fuss. The other day, I tossed some out they stayed there all day. I noticed a couple of birds come by and sniff at them curiously and leave. Instead of squawking at me when I sit out back now, they fight with each other. They know it's Spring, too.

I write this at my desk in the den with the back door open. The lure of the outside is too great. I'm going to go talk my azalea plants into trying it again. After all, what do azaleas know?

good. He can then present this record as supporting evidence when applying to the State in which he was born for a delayed birth certificate. Or he can use it in lieu of a birth certificate. Census records are now accepted as a substitute by all Federal and State agencies and by virtually all of private industry.

Since 1920, when the Age Search Branch was established, nearly ten million persons have taken advantage of this unique service. Currently, approximately 350,000 requests are received annually, a total that comes to about 1,300 daily.

People write in for documentary evidence of age for reasons of employment, retirement, driver's license, insurance, military service, income tax, marriage, voter registration, welfare benefits, even Little League baseball - anyting that requires evidence of age. The Social Security Administration and the Railroad Retirement Board Agency both place great reliance on census records, and they assist many persons each year in obtaining acceptable evidence of age through census records. Census records can also give evidence of citizenship for passport purposes, of occupation (for example black lung benefits for coal miners), and of relationship for estates or inheritances, insurance, DAR membership, family records, and other genealogical

All information in census records is confidential by law. The Bureau of the Census and every one of its employees is prohibited by Federal law from disclosing any information contained in the census records except to the person himself, or for a proper purpose, to a legal representative.

Mayor comments on strip mining

An Open Letter From The Mayor of Helena:

I feel it is my duty as Mayor of Helena to let every citizen know what has been proposed to the Town of Helena if the rezoning is so changed as to permit strip mining in a part of Section 20, Township 20 South, Range 3 West, Shelby County, Alabama.

First, let me say that I am not trying to convince anyone to be for or against this proposal. You elected me to be your mayor and to serve you to the best of your interest and the best of my ability. With that point in mind I will try to give both the positive and negative points concerning this issue.

This is the first time, to my knowledge, strip mining will have been done where zoning exists, and because of this we are in a position to see that the necessary reclamation is done properly or else we have the authority to cease the operation.

Our attorney advises that if we rezone this area, it does not necessarily mean that future strip mining must also be permitted. We must take into consideration the present condition of the land and the possible future development which has been proposed as residential and light industry. We also need to keep in mind that if the energy crisis continues there is the possibility this coal will be mined with no restrictions and no revenue involved.

There are presently many open mine pits and air shafts from abandonded mines which are hazardous to both humans and animals. This can be verified by anyone who is familiar with the area and we have many sportsmen who will confirm these conditions.

This mining venture will provide employment for those qualified citizens who want work and will apply for jobs. It will provide added revenue to the Town of Helena - the Raines Company has agreed to pay 10 cents per ton plus the required I cent per dollar sales tax. At an estimated rate of 15,000 tons per month this would mean $1,500.00 per month plus the amount of sales tax. This will be placed in the General Fund and will be for the benefit of all our citizens. Strip mining companies are required to post a $150.00 per acre fee with the State of Alabama and this company has agreed to post an additional $150.00 per acre with the Town of Helena, which I believe is another first.

There will be a covenant prepared and it will have our attorney's approval with these provisions. The Raines Company will begin strip mining 540 acres just outside our limits around the middle of May, 1975 and we will have no control over this reclamation, however they have offered to pay us 5 cents per ton and the necessary 1/2 cent per dollar sales tax required, provided they are allowed to strip in

There have been two prevalent questions presented to me. How will the coal trucks effect our roads? Will the reclamation be done satisfactorily?

Most of the coal will be going towards Bessemer and will not be routed through Helena. Our roads are County and State owned and kept up respectively. Currently there are gravel and log trucks traveling these route daily and they weigh about the same as the coal trucks.

The reclamation is guaranteed by two bonds and in the form of a covenant with the Town of Helena.

I will be glad to listen to your opinion on the above subject, either positive or negative.

Signed: Charles W. Penhale Mayor Town of Helena

On the Line By Kendrick Horton

Our Social Security system is in big trouble, and it is one of the toughest domestic problems facing our political money-handlers. For the past ten years alert and competent observers have repeatedly stressed that Social Security was, first, headed for bankruptcy, later was on the verge of bankruptcy, and today the system is actually bankrupt fiscally, mathematically, and morally.

It is morally bankrupt because it was never intended to serve as a middle- income, full retirement program for either the poor or the freewheelers who refuse to provide for their own financial security.

If my memory is accurate, my first full year of Social Security tax payments was 1949, when I paid $30 for the year and my employer matched that with anotehr $30. Although $60 was a lot of money in 1949, my payments were hardly enough to affect my meager living standard.

Twenty-six years later, in 1975, several million of us pay the maximum tax which this year will be $824.85 for the employee and a like amount for the employer. In other words, the combined tax the employee and employer paid in 1949 was $60 a year. Having increased our earnings a great deal, some of us will pay a combined total - employee and employer - of $1,649.70!

In 1949 the total amount paid out in benefits for Social Security retirees was about $330 million. That was only one-fourth of the tax income for that year. Eleven years later, in 1960, the outgo was up to $10 billion and was exceeding the income. In 1974, last year, over $68 billion was paid out in Social Security checks to beneficiaries. There has been an 800 percent increase in Social Security taxes just in the last 20 years, and the tax rate has grown three times as fast as has the benefit level.

Social Security started out with a tax of one percent of your gross income for the employee and another one percent to be paid by the employer. There was a further limitation in that the tax only applied to a certain amount of money. That formula still works today. The trouble is that both the percentage of your income and the total amount of your income which is taxable for Social Security have increased rapidly through the years. Today, the percentage factor is 5.85. The maximum wage or salary to which the tax applies is $14,100 for 1975. There are automatic increases in both the percentage and the amount of income to which the tax applies built in for

That automatic device means that, even if there are no other intermediate increases, the present combined total of $1,649.70 each year for worker and employer will reach a total of $2,360.00 a year in 1980, or an average of almost $100 a month for each - - the worker and the employer.

One of President Ford's advisory commissions dropped a bombshell in January when the newspapapers headlined a decision it had made for proposal to the President. The commission had actually voted to immediately increase the maximum amount of individual earnings to which Social Security taxes would be applied from $14,100 a year to $24,000 a year.

The first recommendation was that this increase be made to apply to 1975, even though Congress had already set this year's rates. A few days later the commission reversed itself with an even more frightening recommendation. That which efficient and conservative economists have long dreaded is now becoming a reality. The commission backed off the harsh increase for upper income salaries and called for appropriating money from general tax revenues to make up the Social Security deficit.

Senator Ted Kennedy had that feature in his now abandoned national Health Security Act for the purpose of creating American socialized health care. If Social Security benefits are boosted by funds from general tax revenues, there will be lost forever any possibility of forcing the machiery back into a self supporting operation. The sky will be the limit, and demands for all forms of social services, under the Social Security Administration, will resound across the land. Fewer and fewer Americans will try to save, build up a modest estate, and provide for themselves and their dependents without, or over and above, a minimum government - paid support factor.

The very expensive Medicare program, a declining birth rate which reduces the number of wage earners, increased longevity of our senior citizens, the refusal of Congress to hold benefits and taxes in direct relation one to the other, and the practice of sweeping everybody into the system in just one generation are some of the reasons our present Social Security system is bankrupt.

You can be sure that if any private insurance company attempted to run its affairs by the policies our Congress has consistently passed into law for Social Security, that the company would have been forced out of business long ago.

Former fire chief reviews department

Letter to Editor:

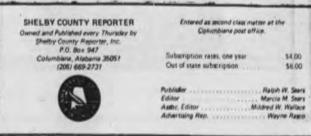

In regards to your last weeks article, April 24, concerning Pelham Fire Dept., your article indicated that chief O. C. Ray has been in position of Fire Chief for a period of eight years. We would like to correct an error in this article concerning the duration of Chief Ray's services

The Pelham Fire Dept. was established in 1966, at which time, Roy Jowers assumed duties as chief of this Dept. and was joined by Joe Glass as assistant chief. We served for a period of approximately 6 years, with a number of dedicated volunteers, including Mr. Ray, and we worked diligently to obtain and hold the rating.

During the early stages of the dept., most fires were in areas where City water lines had not reached. Therefore, Alabaster's back up, and assistance was a vital contribution to this young and struggling Dept.

We commend Chief Ray and his Dept. for the good job they are doing, also Commissioner Wilson. They are faced with the increasing problem of tremendous expansion, both commercial, and residential in this area.

Sincerely, Former Fire Chief Roy D. Jowers Former Ass't. Fire Chief Joe C. Glass Pelham Ala.

Wendy Holcombe captivates Nashville's stars Trying to balance the budget

By Nancy Duncan

Her name is Wendy Holcombe, but after last weekend, spent with her dad in Nashville, she feels more like Cinderella.

The pretty 12-year- old, whose first love is her five-string banjo, was taken to the country music capitol as a birthday treat, to look at a banjo for which she hankers.

She came home without the instrument, but spent a fairy tale weekend that didn't stop until she had played with the best of 'em and received at least half-a-dozen offers to appear on some of the most popular country music shows there are.

Bill, Wendy's father, tells about their experiences, which he terms "unbelievable".

"We were in one of the music stores there and Wendy was playing a banjo the man let her try out. After she had palyed a few songs this guy who was in the back of the store came out and showed a lot of interest in her.

"He said he works with Ronnaie Stoneman on "Hee Haw" and asked us if he could carry us to a recording studio."

At the studio, Holcombe said, Bill Monroe, a promoter who is considered "the Granddaddy of blue grass music" became interested in Wendy's strumming and invited them to meet him backstage at the Grand Old Opry that night.

That was something in itself, Holcombe pointed out. "You just don't get backstage still finds it hard to believe.

was happily strumming along with Grandpa Jones, Roy Acuff and a number of other really big names.

there was much more to come.

Roy Acuff invited Wendy to play on a radio show on which he was to appear later that night. The program eminated from Ernest Tubb's Record Rack in downtown Nashville and when Tubb's wife heard Wendy paly, she called the studio and left the message that she wanted to book her for an appearance when Tubb returned to town.

During the program, Holcombe said, two agents, one who works for Porter Waggoner and another who is with Ralph Emery of "Pop Goes the County, also got her name and address, saying they want her to appear on those shows as well.

time to call Helen, his wife, so she could record Wendy's appearance with Acuff. During the broadcast, Acuff told the friendly, blue-eyed miss, "For your age and all, you are certainly a winner."

Another interesting offer came from the family of Troy Hess, who is billed as the World's Youngest Recording Star. Hess' father is associated with a recording studio in Nashville and the family wants Wendy to team up with the youngster. They urged at the Opry," he marveled, Holcombe to play to let Wendy shaking his head as though he paly with Troy at a two-day show in Ohio this summer At the Opry, Monroe saw to where some 70,000 country church and civic functions. it that the two were introduced music fans are expected to members they employ and this, according to Wendy's father, means a lot. Wendy's triumph in Nashville began just ten months ago when she talked her mother into letting her play the banjo which Holcombe had bought for himself, but discarded as a mite too difficult. Holcombe, versatile head of the household, plays an accomplished guitar and his love of music has filtered down to all three of his children.

Helen was hesitant to let Wendy try her dad's expensive banjo but relented when she promised to sit in the middle of the bed to play.

"I got busy and forgot Holcombe shomehow found about Wendy," her mother said, "but about 45 minutes later I went back there and she was really playing that thing!"

For a time Wendy took lessons, but she has picked up most of what she knows on her own by watching other banjoists perform.

The family plays as a group at many local gatherings and Holcombe has had cards printed billing them as "Miss Wendy and the Home Folks". With Bill on guitar, Wendy, of course, playing her banjo, older sister Cindy at the organ and young Bill (whose stage name is Muley) on the bass, the group enjoys performing for dresses, with matching "bloomers" which Wendy wears when she plays.

Wendy also plays on the Country Boy Eddie show and was featured at the opening of Tannehill State Park last year. Even when she fell into a lake, Holcombe said, she kept performing in true show business tradition.

"She makes a mean banana pudding too," volunteers Wendy, not wanting Mom to be left out of the kudos.

Wendy added another honor to her ever-growing list when she was named runner-up in the Dream Girl contest at Thompson Middle School. Helen said a teacher had told the sixth grade girls that this year they should be content to enter and gain experience, but that sixth graders were never among the 14 finalists selected. Wendy, it seems, broke this tradition by not only becoming a finalist, but placing very high.

Asked if he bought her that new banjo in Nashville, Holcombe replied, "We didn't ever have time to look at it!"

When the visitor's curiosity can no longer be contained, Wendy obligingly plays a couple of short numbers. Watching her perform is as fascinating as hearing her, for while she plays, the sheer joy of making music shines through her lovely young face.

Board discusses emergency room problems

by Marcia M. Sears

Shelby Memorial Hospital pays $165 per night for a doctor to cover the emergency p.m. room, and still the hospital board thinks it is not getting adequate service.

"We've had more complaints in the last month than we had in the past six months." Hospital Administrator Chester Black told the board at its regular meeting April 22.

Board members had apparently heard many complaints too, and were clearly impatient with the emergency room situation.

Herman Moore of Chelsea, said, "There's something missing here that we ought to be able to provide to the public."

The hospital pays a medical doctor in Birmingham to arrange for coverage of the emergency room by new doctors who are completing their residency. These new doctors usually have duties at other hospitals.

coaches and athletes were (Chelsea). honored last week at the Banquet, held at Indian Springs School.

Featured speaker was Herbert Green, athletic director and basketball coach at Auburn University's. Montgomery school. Green, a former Auburn basketball player, told the young athletes that there are three Scharacteristics which players . . . and all young persons . . . should have to be a winner: a tough mind, a tender heart and an able body.

He also imparted his ABC's of living, namely, Athletics, Books and Christ. "It is a privilege to be an athlete and live in this country," he said. "It's true there are a lot of things wrong with our country, but it still can't be beat."

He encouraged students to do their best academic work and "Strive for something you think is beyond you. When you look at that easy road, you are cheating yourself," Green admonished.

In urging young people to live by Christian ideals, Green said, "This old life is too complicated to live on your own. I am glad I found out that Christ and the church are what I need."

Newlyweds shop for homes

by Nancy Duncan

(NOTE: Spring brings, besides the obvious adornments of birds, bees and flowers, an increase in the number of couples making their way to the altar. With housing costs soaring, the Reporter thought it would be interesting to

Shelby County brides are being carried over a variety of thresholds as they establish their first homes, but a common thread runs through their conversations about why they have selected the homes in which they are living.

The similarity noted in these discussions is that fact that almost none of the young couples expects to be able to build or buy a permanent home in the near future -- the culprit, of course, being that two-headed monster, Inflation and Prime Interest Rates.

From conversations with several local newlyweds, it appears that home ownership is attainable only by those who elect to live in mobile homes.

One bride who plans to go this route is Dale Crow Sumners, a recently-wed University of Montevallo student. Dale said, when contacted shortly before her marriage, that if she and her husband don't live in a house owned by his parents, they will buy a mobile home.

she revealed. "I can't see paying rent for something we

"We want to build." the young bride continued, "but

The matter of where to live was easily decided when Dona Gay married Dewey Scott Hames in March. "He already had a mobile home," Dona reported. "He had bought it in Huntsville and brought it with him when he came here."

Asked if she and her husband plan to buy or build a home later, she replied, "I really don't know, but if we do, it will be a long time from now!"

and for much the same reasons as other young couples. "It just seems like a waste of money to pay rent when you can have something," Rita said. "At least it will be ours."

Alabaster passes sewer ordinance

by Rick Moore

The new Alabaster sewerage system became one step closer to becoming a reality with the passage of an ordinance by the : Alabaster City Council Monday night. The measure, passed unanimously, sets up a public I meeting to discuss the materials to be used in the construction of the new system's collection lines.

The public meeting date is set for Monday, June 16. It will start at 7 p.m. and will be held in the Thompson High School auditorium.

Alabaster City Clerk Dorothy Henry explained that a copy of the ordinance will be mailed to every property owner affected by installation of the collection lines. Names and addresses of the property owners will be obtained through records in the county Tax Assessor's Office, she said. The clerk added that between 500 and 1,000 copies will be

Ferd Neilson of Harry Hendon and Associates, Inc., the engineering firm designing the sewer, was present at the meeting. He presented the council with a full set of plans for the collection lines. These plans will be kept in the Alabaster City Hall for public

The ordinance, which was approved by the Alabaster Council Monday, also gives engineering specifications for the materials to be used in the Approval of these materials must be accepted at the June 16 public hearing before the collection line phase of the project can meet final approval by federal and state governmental agencies, the clerk said.

Engineering specifications for the collection lines adopted in Monday's oreinance call for 2,000 cubic yards of sand cushion, 18 cubic yards of concrete, 70,650 linear feet of

Governor's utility package meets defeat

by Don Wasson

MONTGOMERY - - At a post-mortem press conference following the defeat of his "utility package" of legislation, Gov. George Wallace did his best to make it look, not so much like a loss for him as just another victory

While trying very hard to impress everyone with his reverence for legislative independence ("I'm not trying to impugn anyone," he kept saving), it was pretty clear that Wallace thought the Alabama Power Company had weilded considerably more influence on the State Senate than he

A backward look at the third special session of the year, which wags are labeling "The Utility Futility" session. shows it was apparent from the outset that the governor's bills were an attempt to bring the Alabama Power Company

As the governor saw it, or at least how it was impressed upon him, the power firm was, and is, attempting to burden the present generation with the cost of producing energy for future use generations. The massive costs of nuclear produced energy, of building the nuclear plants, is many times greater than was the cost of building the hydroelectric dams or the steam generating plants which now produce our electrical energy.

And that assessment is exactly right, just as this generation is reaping the benefits of power plants bought and paid for by the consumers of another, bygone era.

No one in the financial field has figured out how to borrow the huge sums of money it takes to build a nuclear plant and not pay it back until as yet unborn people enter the world and reach the age where they become homeowners and consumers of electricity.

That is all theory, of course, and the third special session simply refused to go along with the governor in changing the law to the extent that the power firm and other utilities could not finance their future expansions.

Wallace said the same package will be introduced in the regular session and the prefiled bills were to be introduced the first day of the regular session on Tuesday of this week. It is unlikely that they will make any more headway in the regular session than they did in the special

The governor will not come right out and say that he favors taking taxes now earmarked for education and using them for some other purpose -- in areas where money is badly needed.

He keeps saying that he will not advocate the use of the present surplus ($114 million) in the Special Educational Trust Fund for other purposes, but he has yet to say that he will oppose any move to take taxes now earmarked for education and let them flow into the General

Without increasing taxes, that is about the only way out for those agencies which live out of the General Fund and those include the hard-pressed Highway department. the Mental Health Department, the Board of Corrections (prisons) and others.

More and more legislators are coming to believe that the body must, indeed, begin diverting earmarked taxes from education to some other areas.

There is really little sentiment for a special session for the education appropriations bill. With that healthy surplus, the thinking is that the Education Department doesn't have any problem except how to slice a pretty fat

In other areas of government, there isn't enough money to provide the needed services and there seems to be a great deal of sentiment for a re-ordering of priorities.

Staton encouraged by possible relief of prison crowding

The chairman of the state prison board, Thomas Staton, says he is encouraged by Governor George Wallace's recent statements about relieving the overcrowded conditions in Alabama's penal institutions and providing more money to operate the prisons.

Staton said a recent conference with the Governor was, in his words, "promising" and the prospect of getting a new prison facility to take the pressure off the existing prisons is a big relief to the board members.

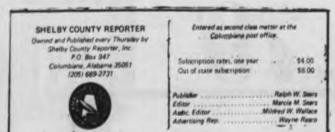

The prison system is now housing some 4,700 inmates in buildings which should accommodate no more than about 3,400. And in the past few months, the prison population has been increasing at the rate of about 100 every month instead of 100 a year.

The board chairman said overcrowding is the biggest problem. Next, he says, is the need for more guards to maintain tighter security, and the lack of funds to feed and clothe the inmates.

Wallace told reporters last week he has "some specific plans" to solve the prison problems but he hasn't made them public. He probably will do that when he outlines his over-all legislative program to the legislature.

Along with its other headaches, the prison board is looking for a new chief classification officer to replace Hugh Swafford, the man who engineered the present inmate classification program. Swafford resigned last month with no explanation.

Isabell Moore, a classification specialist, has taken over Swafford's duties until a new chief classification officer can be found.

IRS outlines homebuyers' tax cuts

After President Ford signed the Tax Reduction Act of 1975, there was much confusion among consumers and builders over one section of the bill which provides a five percent tax credit for persons buying new homes this year. In order to help potential homebuyers in determining how the program works and who qualifies for the tax credit, the local Home Builders Association has extracted from the first official Internal Revenue Service guidelines the following facts for home buyers:

- The maximum tax credit is $2,000. In case of a married couple filing separate returns, the maximum credit is $1,000 for each taxpayer.

- The home must be purchased as the buyer's principal residence. Vacation homes do not qualify.

- A tax credit is not a tax deduction or tax rebate. A tax credit means that a taxpayer subtracts the amount of his tax credit from the amount of his federal income tax liability. For example, if you qualify for a $1,750 tax credit, and if your tax liability for 1975 is $1,750, you in effect would owe no taxes for 1975. If $1,750 was deducted from your paychecks this year in federal taxes, you would get a $1,750 tax refund when you filed your 1975 federal income tax return.

- The tax credit may not exceed a taxpayer's liability. For example, if you qualify for a $2,000 tax credit and your tax liability if $1,500, you would not receive a $500 refund. The tax credit cannot be carried forward or carried back; it is only applicable to tax liability in the year the Members of the Tax Equalization Board, L. P. Wilson, of Calera, L. W. Lauer, Calera; and L. L. Carter of Vincent, are reviewing the tax assessment records before sending out notices of any change in property assessments that have been made. Any additions or new buildings etc. that have been recorded since the board last met are being noted. If property tax is raised on any previous assessed land, the owner will be notified and any protest the individual may have will be heard at a later date set aside for this purpose.

May 19 will be a busy day in the courthouse. On this date, all property on which the ad valorem tax has not been paid, will be sold publicly in front of the courthouse.

According the Doris Turner, chairman of Board of Registrars, Monday, May 19, is also the last day the Board will be in session until July. If you are planning to become a member of the electorate of Shelby County and have met the requirements, you may register on this one day session.

The July schedule for registration for new voters has been set for July 7, 8, 9, 21, 22, 23, and 24.

The civil week of Shelby County Circuit Court will begin in Columbiana Monday morning, May 12, at 10 o'clock. Sixty-five qualified electors have been summoned to serve as jurors. Twenty-one cases have been set for trial during the week.

Members of the grand jury have also been recalled due to the number of cases that have been docketed. District Attorney Harold Walden will be in charge of the grand jury's investigation.

The criminal division of the Circuit Court has been set for the week beginning May 26. One hundred persons have been summoned to serve as jurors during this week.

According to Dr. Charles Thornburg, the innoculation of dogs against rabies will be held during June. This innoculation is mandatory.

Ninety seven cases on the arraignment docket were presented before presiding Judge James H. Sharbutt in a one day session of the Circuit Court held Monday May 5. Preceding this docket the Judge met with attorneys and heard various motions regarding cases set for trial May 12. According to Circuit Clerk Kyle Lansford, the arraignment docket was the largest ever held in a one day session of the court since he has been in office.

A state wide election will be held on June 10 at which time the voters will express by their ballots whether the Alabama State Legislature will convene annually or bi-ennially. The electorate will also vote on a bond issue regarding Alabama State Docks.

Mike Worley, with the Jacobs Co., and Richard N. -- In cases where a buyer entered into a purchase contract prior to March 13, 1975, he is still eligible for the tax credit as long as he did not settle or close until after March 12, 1975.

- In the case where a taxpayer is renting a new home and decides to buy it, he would be eligible for the tax credit if he was the first occupant of the home and if a written option to purchase the home was contained in the original lease agreement.

· Taxpayers claiming the credit should fill out the new IRS Form 5405 and mail it in with their 1975 tax return next year. These forms will be made available later in the year. The taxpayer also must attach the seller's certificate, that the residence was sold at the lowest price ever offered, to his 1975 income tax return to qualify for the tax credit.

- There is no price limit on homes. A buyer of a new $60,000 home qualifies for a tax credit as well as the buyer of a new $35,000 home.

-- Practically any type of new home can qualify for the tax credit. It can be a new single-family house, a rowhouse or townhouse, a condominium apartment or townhouse, or a mobile home. In the case of duplexes or triplexes or a four-family house, only that portion of the purchase price attributable to the cost of the unit in which the taxpayer lives can be used in calculaiting the credit. However, condominium conversions and rehabilitated and renovated units do not qualify for the tax credit.

- The credit is based on the adjusted basis of the new principal residence. Thus, if a taxpayer sold his home at a $10,000 profit and then purchased a new $40,000 home, the $10,000 profit from his old home would be subtracted from the purchase price of his new home for tax purposes. In other words, instead of qualifying for a $2,000 tax credit on a $40,000 home, the taxpayer would only qualify for a $1,500 tax credit on a $30,000 home.

-- Construction on the residence must have begun before March 26, 1975. Construction is considered to have commenced when significant physical work, such as digging of the footings or excavation, has occurred on the building

-- Except in cases of self-construction, the residence must be acquired and occupied as a principal residence after March 12, 1975, and before January 1, 1977. A binding

Motorists report litter incident

by Fred Cooper

Do you remember the "Kitty Klean" campaign that the Shelby County school children staged not long ago? It was a project aimed at cleaning up the countryside next to county roads where unthinking motorists tossed bottles. cans, garbage, and who knows what as they sped along. It was the third year for such a campaign and the publicity along with the garbage had gotten bigger and bigger.

I don't remember how many plastic bags of refuse were taken from the sides of the roads during the cleanup. but having gone through hours and hours of what my sergeant referred to as "policing the area" when I was an enlisted man. I'm sure it was backbreaking work.

I hope that a group of kids had the opportunity to discuss the Kitty Klean campaign this past Saturday. If they did. it was with a Shelby County Deputy Sheriff.

They were in a green Ford van with an Alabama license tooling along on Highway 119 just our of Alabaster headed toward Montevallo. Steve Huffstutler and I were behind them on the way toward Montevallo ourselves. We had our attention drawn to the van because one of the kids -- I say kids. The one we got a good look at could have been any age from 15 to 18. The rest of the van could have been packed with adults -- leaned way out the window on the passenger's side. Sort of unusual, we commented, to be hanging out a window like that. Less than a minute later. we found out that it wasn't unusual at all, not for the activity he had planned.

As we followed and watched, a bottle came sailing out of the car and into the foliage on the side of the Even without being aware of the tremondous amount of effort put in by the school kids, we would have been incensed at the complete lack of regard for the countryside. People, however, will do that sort of thing.

A brief instant later another bottle went flying out of the window. This was too much. We decided to gain on them and start blowing the horn if for nothing else, just to let them know somebody was watching and cut it out. While we were gaining, two more bottles flew and it quickly became apparent that this kid hanging out the window wasn't just cleaning out the van. He was throwing at signs. mailboxes, posts, and anything else that might be beside the

We did catch up with the van and Steve leaned on the horn. He never turned around to look, just kept tossing bottles. While we watched, he hit one sign and the bottle bounced back onto the road and shattered, scattering glass across the asphalt. One of the van's rear tires ran over the chunks of flying broken glass. We were approaching Moore's Crossroad and obviously weren't going to be able to deter the bottle thrower so we pulled off and Steve headed for the phone. He called Columbiana and gave the Sheriff's Department a description of the van and the tag number. We then went on into Montevallo and drove around for a few minutes to see if we could spot it ourselves. Wherever they were going. however, was not where we looked.

This doesn't have a follow-up because I don't know what happened. I can hope, though, that sometime last Saturday afternoon, a carload of people in a green van were sitting beside the road with a flat tire from borken glass talking to a Shelby County deputy.

They earned it.

Handguns are cause of police deaths

by Clarence Kelley Director, Federal Bureau of Investigation

Many persons will pause this month, on official days of law enforcement observance, to commemorate the proud and selfless role of our profession. When they do, the unabated killings of law enforcement officers in the performance of their duties must be given special

It is no comfort that the total of 132 local, county, State, and Federal law enforcement officers slain in 1974 at the hands of assailants was just under the record total of 134 similarly murdered the year before. Thus far this year, the pace of these killings shows no signs for encouragement.

Indeed, the murder of just one officer in the defense of the community ought to weigh heavily on everyone who cherishes the rule of law and the protection it affords us all.

Records of the circumstances in the past year which attended these deaths are filled with many poignant but revealing facts that stand out boldly among the cold statistics. The typical victim officer was aged 33, had five years' or less service with his department, and was on Saturday night patrol during July in a large metropolitan area. Soon after arriving at a scene in response to a disturbance call, he was confronted face-to-face by an assailant who shot him from no more than five feet away with a bullet, fired from a handgun, that lodged fatally in his upper torso.

There are many lessons to be pondered from this characteristic incident. Two in particular command my attention for they are overwhelming in their consistency over a period of many years.

One is that handguns are, beyond any doubt, the most deadly of all weapons to be encountered by the police officer. Their easy concealment from the eyes of an approaching policeman, or others nearby who might warn him of their presence, writes DANGER. But, it is in an almost invisible script. Handguns leave the officer with scant opportunity to take cover. And, like all firearms, they are quick, efficient, effortless, and nearly always fatal in their operation.

The other lesson, it seems, is that nightime is an unwitting but valuable accomplice to the handgun user. It and dimly lit situations predominate the encounters that prove fatal to law enforcement personnel. These two facts alone - the dominance of handguns as the instrucments of death and of nightime as the time of death - require our close examination.

Over recent years the FBI has placed added training emphasis on minimizing the danger of nightime encounters of law enforcement personnel with armed adversaries. I urge all departments to do the same. We must correct any weaknesses in our capability to handle nocturnal confrontations with armed assailants.

If we are truly to honor our profession this month, let us begin with positive efforts of our own to reduce the slaughter of fellow officers.

Mother, mother oh how many imes did I say that word? You never was too tired or sick, not to take time off, to listen to my problems, advise when I ask, share in my happiness, achievements, pep me up when sadness crept in, a shoulder I could always lean on, and someone I could count on, who, but you Mother.

Your name burns as a torch in the deep darkness of night, and a guiding light through my days. Oh, mother the sweetness of that name. May your faith, courage, strength and determination not be in vain, for your child's sake, but a rock on which to rebuild the remnants.

Yes, Mother you traveled many a hard road and by-passed the luxuries, to give to me, of which I shall ever be mindful of.

When I was small and a ainbow appeared across the sky after a rain, I would turn and ask you, "Mother, I wonder if there really is a pot of gold at the end of it." Mother I'd say now, that

They need me little now, as they go their separate ways. But still in the night and through each waking hour, I pray that you will help them overcome temptations, bless them and guide them. God, let them feel your presence, and know the power of prayers, show them how to impart your great truths to their little ones, who depend on them as they once

Teach me how to find other interests and perform other duties. Make my last days more fruitful, and forgive me God if I am selfish in asking that they remember their old mother, if only when they talk with you,

Amen

Shelby County High School in Columbiana holds the distinction of being the first school, in this grade bracket, to hold Graduating Exercises. This historic event occurred 60 years ago May 22, 1915. We were talking to a group of 1975 "graduates-to- be" one day last week when we learned from Lawrence Elliott, (that distinguished looking manabout- town you see daily on Main, a veteran of three wars, and an avid preserver of historic records, who can tell you more about events that have happened in this county than anyone we know) stepped up and remarked that he was a Class of 1915 - - the first class to receive diplomas from this institution; and whats more, he had a picture to prove it.

Lawrence is a native of Montevallo and proud of it. He is incidentally the writer's brother-in- law -- and I am proud of this fact. We asked him to produce the proof -which he lost no time in doing.

We share the picture with you as a worthwhile "first" to be preserved in the school's records. Those of you familiar with this school's history will recall that all early records were destroyed by fire.

The age-old picture is remarkably well preserved.

Thought For The Week

"... as having nothing, and yet possessing all things." II Corinthinas 6:10 The Christian has nothing, yet possesses all things. Against such a paradox Satan makes little headway. He says, "Serve me and I will give you many things." The Christian answers, "you can't give me anything, for I have everything." Satan says, "I will take away what you have." The Christian replies, "You can't take anything away, for I don't have anything!" Satan says, "I will take your life." The Christian says, "To depart and be with Christ is far better." What can you do with a man like that? You can't head him off even if you take his head!

by Don Wasson

MONTGOMERY -- Gov. George C. Wallace's otential as a candidate for the Democratic presidential iomination can be measured these days in the depths of inguish being displayed in the Eastern Establishment press.

In several of the leading newspapers of that area, the governor has been the recent subject of learned discourses on what kind of governor he has made for Alabama. It is ilmost uncanny to see how the nabobs of the EE press all wallow the same bait, time and time again, as cast upon he waters by the high-level muckety mucks who run the national Democratic Party.

Both the Wall Street Journal and the New York Times examined the Wallace record recently and, to the surprise of absolutely no one, found it badly wanting. Their explorers in-depth came into the Dixieland jungle, talked to about the same Wallace-haters and went back nawth to write lengthy columns about how Alabama hasn't progressed one bit under 12 years of Wallace.

There is a modicum of truth to their revelations, but the information was a revelation only the New Yorkers and others on the Eastern Seaboard who form most of their misguided notions upon the blatherings of such journals.

George Wallace probably will not be recorded in the pages of history as a governor who contributed greatly to the well-being of his state. His greatest talent is for reading the public pulse, not for administering the business of state government.

All that aside, the downgrading of the governor by the Eastern Establishment press is somewhat galling to Alabamians who know that there is no Eastern governor whose accomplishments to date have made him any more likely to be remembered for administrative talents than Wallace.

What's interesting in all this is that the new approach to EE press comments about Wallace is a clear indication that he has the national party in a dither and they're going to use every trick in the book to knock him down in the polls prior to the running of the primaries.

It is also interesting to note that North Carolina's ex-governor Terry Sanford and Georgia's ex-governor, Jimmy Carter, are both saying that they welcome a face-to-face test with Wallace in the 1976 primaries and if their utterances are anything more than political bravado, there are a number of people around who will take the short odds that Wallace will embarass them badly when the Pity the poor Democrats! They simply can't come up with a candidate who can mix it with Wallace and win. Scoop Jackson could best serve his cause with a large dose of silence. McGovern is moving around again and beginning to make noises but another helping of that loser would just about finish off the Democratic Party.

It appears that the party is going to have to go begging to Ted Kennedy to carry the banner, which is probably the approach he has been fishing for all along.

That would just about force Wallace into a third-party approach which would again divide the Democrats and leave it wide open for a Republican repeat.

The Democrats can't live with Wallace and they can't live without him. But right about now, it appears that the deep thinkers have about decided that living without him is the lesser of two evils.

If they read him out again, it could be the greatest mistake the party has ever made.

How much would the county have saved if the new judicial article had been fully implemented a year ago?

According to figures released by Probate Judge Conrad Fowler on Monday, Shelby County would have saved $78,593 for the fiscal year Oct. 1, 1973 to Sept. 30,

Much of the discussion surrounding the judicial article has involved the costs of administering it. These figures show that the counties would not have as much expense in conducting their courts as they now have.

If the judicial article had been in operation during the year quoted, the state would have assumed the salaries of the circuit clerk, the judge of the intermediate court the county district attorney, their clerks, secretaries and aides, telephones, postage and other items, for a total of

For state's growth--

Dock expansion vitally needed

On June 10, Alabama voters will have the opportunity of approving a $45 million bond issue for the expansion and modernization of the Alabama State Docks at Mobile. This project is vital to the future economic growth of our State. Even with the tonnage being handled by the port today, the facilities are often taxed to, or beyond, the capacity for which they were designed. When we consider the rapidly developing waterways and mushrooming industrial growth, we see that the project is absolutely essential.

Presently the Tennessee-Tombigbee Waterway is under construction and in a few years will open the Port of Mobile to the traffic and commerce of twenty or more states of mid-America. Much of the commerce of Alabama's busiest river, the Tennessee, will then be diverted to the Tennessee-Tombigbee. Add to all of this the commerce of waterways yet to be developed such as the Chattahoochee-Apalachicola River System and the Coosa/Alabama and the projected increase for the Port of Mobile is staggering.

Alabama's agriculture is not marking time while our industrial complex expands. Alabama's farmers in recent years have flooded the facilities at the State Docks with record shipments of soybeans and grain. Agricultural exports are sure to increase.

Unless Alabamians are aware of our vast network of waterways, they may tend to think of the bond issue as something that will benefit only the Mobile area. The economic consequences of an improved port will be shared

Please bear in mind that while this bond issue will be a general obligation of the State of Alabama, revenues from State Docks will be used to retire the indebtedness

When we consider that the Federal Government will invest $900 million in the Tennessee-Tombigbee project, it seems only fair that Alabamians invest $45 million for the development of their own port facilities.

I will always be grateful for your support of the bond issue and your help in enlisting the support of the people in

Wallace blasted on education issue

An Open Letter to Governor Wallace:

I love an optimist, but a statement recently attributed to you in the Birmingham press goes much further than the realm of optimism. Indeed, it defies reality.

In an article stating your intention not to take any so-called "surplus" education money from the state's Education Trust Fund and place it in the anemic General Fund, you are quoted as having said, "Education has a $140 million surplus and the General Fund is broke. Education has only the problem of having more money than it knows what to do with."

First, I must question your use of the word "surplus". You and I both know that the proper terminology is "Unappropriated". To call that money surplus when our beleagured schools are crying for help is .. is ... well, as I say, it defies reality.

If education has "more money than it knows what to do with" why in the name of Horace Mann are students required to pay an endless string of fees and urged to go door-to-door throughout the year selling candy, magazines and untold other goodies to make money for the schools?

Likewise, if this blissful state really does exist, why do school librarians have to hold book fairs to stock library shelves with the minimum number of books they are required to have?

And why is our local board of education pushing for a one percent sales tax in the county just for education?

Indeed, if education in Alabama is in such great shape as you say, why are PTA's, booster clubs and other parent groups working tooth and toenail on carnivals, horse shows, bazaars and the like? I can assure you it's not so they can put TV sets in every classroom or outfit school clinics. It's to help the schools provide the bare necessities needed to

Frankly, I can't imagine how that school in Washington ever came up with the idea that you are such a friend to education. If you were, you would, first of all, be aware of problems which schools throughout the state are

Shelby County, being about the only one with an increasing school enrollment, has probably greater problems than others, but I doubt there are any which wouldn't benefit from some of that unappropriated money you have kept unavailable all this time. If you really deserved the award that Washington parochial school had in mind for you (but later withdrew because of pressure from higher-ups) you would have long since called a special legislative session to deal with some of these problems. I find no justification in your refusal to do this and allow for the appropriation of the funds in question. I must agree with a county official who theorizes that you are keeping the money intact so you can traipse around the country bragging about Alabama's "surplus" education Well, gov, I just wanted to let you know that a few of

The Chelsea Youth Club has extended an open invitation to Shelby Countians to attend a meeting on the site of the Chelsea Community Center on Sunday afternoon, May 18 at 3

All members and anyone with equipment that could be used in helping develop the property are urged to attend. The club is hoping to have Little League ballfields ready for use next season.

Members of the Union United Methodist Church will observe their annual Homecoming Day Saturday, May 17th. Services will begin at 11 a.m. with Rev. Edward Gardner bringing the message. The Keymasters Quartet will be singing both in the morning and afternoon. A luncheon will be served by members of the church.

A brochure of the church and cemetery will be available with special emphasis on the care and maintenance of the cemetery.

The regular monthly singing will be held at the Calera Bible Baptist Church on 16th St. on purposes and work that the Coleman is chairman and everyone is welcome.

Oiliness is sometimes caused by excessive massaging of your scalp. This can overstimulate the oil glands. Avoid harsh products that will clean the oil but leave your hair dry. A mild product used often will get rid of the oil and still save your hair.

Acidified Jellasheen shamp is great for oily hair.

Frizziness can be caused by hair that is overelastic - there's a big difference between curling up and frizzing up. The latter is caused by an overabundance of moisture in the hair shaft, and using an acidified product will help. Since most water is slightly alkaline, and many hair products are also alkaline, the combination can upset the natural balance of your hair's normal acid - alkaline base. A lemon or vinegar rinse will help alleviate the problem, but be sure to rinse out thoroughly. Also you can buy RedKen

FISHING BUG BITES . . . SO DO THE FISH - - Hoy Hughes, Billy Hughes and Greg Winslett (above left) give testimony to the fishing fever that has been striking Shelby County anglers. The three boys make it look easy as they display a long string of catfish they caught in a private pond near Montevallo last Sunday. Dave Genry and Randy Vickery (below left) of Alabaster show off a nice string of bass they caught while fishing in Lay Lake last Friday afternoon. Also fishing Friday, C. E. Hitt (above right) had the same good luck as he brings in a limit stringer of bass. The bass continued to bite throughout the weekend as Ed Burg and Eddie Paul prove (below right) with a large string they caught on Lay Lake Sunday afternoon.

B - A's prepare for clash with Oakland

The Birmingham A's have been getting ready for their exhibition game with the three-time World Champion Oakland A's tonight by splitting four games with Jacksonville last week and taking two three from Orlando over the weekend.

The exhibition game will be played at Rickwood Field in Birmingham tonight, May 15, starting at 7:30. Thirteen former Birmingham players now fill the Oakland roster. The latest Oakland player to rise through Birmingham was Claudell Washington, who went strait to the big leagues after playing on the Alabama team.

A's owner Charles O. Finley is due to be at the game. Birmingham Mayor George Seibels is expected to present Finley with a citation during the pre-game festivities.

The Birmingham team was 11 and 14 as of last Monday with a 9-5 record at home and 3-9 on the road.

The Magic City squad will be looking to its ranks for the support of such players as Alan Griffin, Wayne Gross and Dennis Haynes. A pitcher, Griffin is 4-0 for the year. He has been effective as a "Stopper" man with three of his wins coming after losses. Gross leads the Birmingham A's in home runs this season this year with three. Haynes leads the team in the hitting department with a .292 average going into last week's play.

Pitcher Clarance Harrall of Wilton is reported to be recovering well from an elbow operation. The Shelby County hurler has been limbering up his arm and may possibly see some action against Oakland.

Tickets for the game may be obtained at Rickwood Field, Alands in Hoover Mall, Eastwood Mall and Western Hills Mall.

THREE GATES OF GOLD

If you are tempted to reveal A tale someone to you has told About another, let it pass, Before you speak, three gates of gold.

Three narrow gates: First, "Is it true?" Then, "Is it needful?" In your mind Give truthful answer. And the next Is last and narrowest . . . "Is it kind?"

And if to reach your lips at last It passes through these gateways three, Then you may tell the tale, nor fear What the result of speech may be.

That's what thousands of school children hear every week at the Demonstration

Last Friday the Shelby County Reporter joined several hundred elementary school children to see the baby animals. It soon became obvious why the youngsters enjoy the farm so much, as the delighted students petted rabbits, chicks, lambs, and other baby animals.

by Don Wasson

MONTGOMERY -- There isn't any doubt that a rious push will be made this year to permit public nployees to organize for collective bargaining purposes. hat means to unionize.

It is difficult to read the pulse of the legislature on his question, but there does seem to be a reluctance on the art of several lawmakers to permit unionization prior to a /holesale reorganization of state government.

Once the employees belong to a union, it will be next o impossible to pare down the size of the state

As noted here recently, the national press and the National Democratic Party seem to be zeroing in on Gov. George Wallace's record as a governor in their attmepts to liscredit him as a possible presidential nominee of the

If George Wallace wants to overcome that criticism and to become a giant under the microscope of his detractors, then the best move he could make would be to overhaul state government in all possible ways.

We have heard an awful lot about legislative reform from this new legislature, but it did not seem able to overcome the Senate's proclivity for filibustering and for legislating by power blocks.

A strong governor could do a lot to bring public pressure to bear for real legislative reform. And while on that subject, there is no reason why Alabama could not have a Unicameral legislature -- one house of 100 members, meeting once each year for 90 calendar days, salaried at $25,000 a year, a new legislative building with adequate staffing and technical assistance.

But it is in the administrative branch of government where the real savings could be effected.

Why not a single term, six-year gubernatorial tenure at $50,000 a year? The incumbent governor would not spend his time running for re-election and would have time to see a new program instituted and implemented during his

Why not streamline government, as the Governor's Cost Control Survey recommended, to five major divisions, consolidating a lot of bureaus and agencies which have become little empires in their own right, spending an awful lot of money without accomplishing much of anything.

Why not establish a public information office to keep the public fully informed of present actions and future plans?

In realigning the duties and functions of state agencies, a reduction of the state payroll of about 20 percent could be affected. Good, dependable and industrious people would have no fear of losing their jobs. Only the deadwood, the political appointees would be eliminated.

In addition, the incumbent governor, in looking for ways to improve his image with the national press as a governor who did something for his state, could bring about widescale tax reform to end the regressive tax system in the state, spearhead election reforms and strengthening of local governments, institute progressive prison reforms aimed at rehabilitation and lower recidivism, begin an orderly reduction of the public debt and pay-as-you-go financing for future public works.

He could tighten the State Merit System to insure a capable, efficient career employment system.

Reform can come, if the leadership is provided. It came to the state's judicial department because leadership was there and Alabama's court system is a model of efficiency and judicial equity.

Sense of patriotism should be restored

Something new has been added to our political system. For the first time in 200 years we have a president and a vice-president who were not elected. For many years the liberals have agitated against our constitutional system (3 equal branches) and have longed for the weak parliamentary system of Europe. The Twenty-Fifth Amendment made it possible. They ousted Agnew and then Nixon in a most tragic lynching.

As a conservative, I deplore the inflation . . . recession energy shortages . . . and the fall of freedom in South Vietnam. All of these followed our witchhunt of 1973-74. The blood bath which now begins in Southeast Asia will never bother the liberals. They have climbed to success over the bodies of our friends and allies as well as 50,000 and our own. They will cover up news of the wholesale killing. This will not concern them. Have they not destroyed America? Has not Senator Birch Bayh successfully thwarted the will of 49 of our states? For the benefit of future congressional races let's review some of our conservative aims and principles . .

We philosophical conservatives are for:

(1) Repeal of the Twenty-Fifth Amendment . . .

(2) Freedom of choice . . . as to School busing, etc. . . (3) Restoration of the right of prayer . . . in schools

(4) Nullification of the Supreme Court's ruling on abortion ... so as to confer some measure of freedom on Doctors, Nurses and Hospital employees in matters of conscience ... At present, hospitals can not refuse to perform these murders . . . neither can Nurses nor Doctors

(5) Simplification of the Income Tax with the same rates for all taxpayers . . . raising the exemptions to $1,000 for each dependent . . .

(6) The elimination of unnecessary questionnaires . . . and other intrusions into the private lives of our citizens

(7) The restoration of work incentives by eliminating most welfare and most aid programs . . .

(8) The rebuilding of law and order by a program of even handed and certain law enforcement and the revival of the death penalty.

We are not ashamed that our ancestors established a Christian nation. Neither are we ashamed of our love of country. We wish to restore patriotism and we prefer our traditional system (strong presidency) to the liberal plan of weak governments which fall as fast as lynching parties can be organized. If we will do right we can have a golden age of peace and prosperity.

Sincerely, Frank P. Walls 2108 1/2 Sixth Street Tuscaloosa, Alabama 35401

I'm sure this past Sunday at the University of Montevallo wasn't too different than it was ten years ago. There's a new building next to Old Calkins Hall, Reynolds has been remodeled, and King House is restored and maybe the stone steps leading into Thomas Waverly Palmer Hall are worn down a little more but not too much is different.

The grass still grows brightly green on the quadrangle. The inoperative sundial still catches the sun's rays and doesn't know what to do with them. Along the wall lining the street across from Napier, bushes and flowers still intertwine.

And at some point last Sunday, a senior student walked across an early morning campus and the thought came to him that after four years of digging into the mysteries of that school, of academics, and of himself, after four years of securing a place where he belonged, he had already become a stranger.

It wasn't possible anymore to go to Main Hall and seek out a date. Close friends weren't gathered in the Student Union. Classes weren't waiting for him on Monday, demanding papers and quizzes. It was all over.

Now he could see some of his classmates that he started out with four years ago and these people that he had learned to live with and to love were also strangers. They were dressed not in jeans and a dirty shirt but very formerly, escorting parents, brothers, and sisters around the campus. His friends weren't the friends he remembered but instead confused people who were escorting confused people, trying to share and explain a life that was over by pointing out buildings and telling anecdotes that really didn't have any meaning. And wondering why they were being jerked back into the life that had been left four years

It couldn't have been much different Sunday than it was a decade ago when the senior student finally went back to his room to get dressed for the last time, this time in a cap and gown. Walking down the empty hallway of his dorm, I'm sure he wondered where it all went and why it

The ritual was quickly completed. The standing in a long line outside, the marching in to the quick tempo of blaring organ music, and finally, the stroll across stage to get the piece of paper that the student had worked and suffered for and was now the symbol that was going to hurl him away from what had become home.

I'm sure that good-byes were made casually last Sunday because there people had lived together and said good-bye hundreds of times. The realization had not yet come that this was the last one.

1965 - 1975. Ten years. The hair was shorter then, the dresses longer. The few ties I owned were narrow and I had two pair of dark socks, the rest white. I knew only three things for sure and a fourth I couldn't yet believe. I had a college degree. I had to have a job. I was eligible for

Fastest-growing county last to aid retarded

Letter to Editor:

Did you know that Shelby County is the fastest growing county in Alabama? Did you also know that Shelby County is among the last of all the counties in providing services for the mentally retarded? We can be proud of the first fact but we certainly can't take any pride in the last. And we, as residents of Shelby County, have to do something to correct that shameful situation, if our county is ever to reach its fullest potential. We have to provide educational and training facilities for ALL our

The Shelby County Association for Retarded Citizens is making definite plans toward providing these desperately needed services. We are presently working hard on renovating the building that will house the new Day Training Center for Retarded Adults. This Center will be located in Siluria in the old Doctor's Offices.

Next we hope to start an infant stimulation program for infants through the pre-school age. We also support the public schools in creating more classes for all levels of mental retardation. These are just a few of our plans.

At this month's meeting - May 26th at Shelby Memorial Hospital in the new Dining Hall at 7:00 p.m. we will show a slide presentation of various programs being conducted in our neighboring counties. This will give you a visual idea of some of our plans for the future.

Come - get involved in the lives of our most neglected citizens. You'll receive a great reward in personal satisfaction.

280 route

The master plan calls for completing the four lanes from Highway 119 near the Cahaba Valley branch bank, all the way to where the four lanes resume in Childersburg.

However, due to limited funds and other factors the next proposed section will be at the western end where the highway crosses the mountain and threads through the Narrows. Fourlaning of the excellent two-lane link from Harpersville to Childersburg has yet to be scheduled.

According to the map prepared for this paper by the Alabama Highway Department, the next proposed segment will follow much the same route. However, the teritative plan calls for bypassing the Narrows and straightening the road. These proposed improvements may be altered when the project is undertaken. At present the Highway Department still has a great deal of work to do in just; planning the link.

Funds for the current projects are being made available under the Governor's Death Trap elimination program.

Through the years, the store has become more than just a place to buy food and other provisions. Thought For The Week

We spend much time and money learning how to speak when we need to learn how to listen. "...hearing they hear not" (Matt. 13:13) "...if any man hear my works" (John 12:47) "He that hath ears, let him hear" (Mark 4:9)

After all, we have two ears to hear with and only one mouth to speak with, thank the Lord! (Copied -Vance Havner)

after the picture was made, the Northern invaders wiped out the Helena rolling mill and marched on to Shelby, Montevallo, Brierfield, and Selma.

Part II by Willard Harrison

Helena's Central Iron Works has been almost forgotten in the upsurge of interest in the Civil War. But as we showed several weeks ago, the town and its rolling mill were important parts of the Confederate war effort.

Almost everyone is aware of the importance of the iron businesses at Shelby, Brierfield, and Tanniehill, but few realize that Helena's rolling mill was second only to Selma in the tonnage of iron produced in state rolling mills. While both Shelby and Brierfield were primarily known for their furnaces, and pig iron, Helena's output of bar iron was 50 percent greater than either.

Ethel Armes lists Helena Rolling Mill as one of the six such plants in Alabama during the war. Her 1910 book makes mention of its importance to the Confederacy. Actually there was no "Helena" during the war, and that part of town was called "Central," as was the rolling mill. The south end of the town was Hillsborough, and it was not until the late 1870's that the town incorporated with the name

Common sense

Boating Safety precautions

This summer, more boats than ever will weigh anchor and split the waves of Alabama's coastal and inland waters. From Mobile Bay to Lake Guntersville, Lay Lake to the Black Warrior River, thousands of sail and motor boaters will converge, vying for the right of way as they escape the cares of their jobs.

Summertime is for relaxation, says the Insurance Information Institute, but one thing that should not be relaxed is common sense boating safety precautions.

Coast Guard accident statistics provide an uncomfortable reminder of just what can go wrong off shore: boats are swamped and their occupants thrown into the water, capsizings and sinkings lead to deaths by drowning and fires and explosions wreck anticipations of smooth sailing.

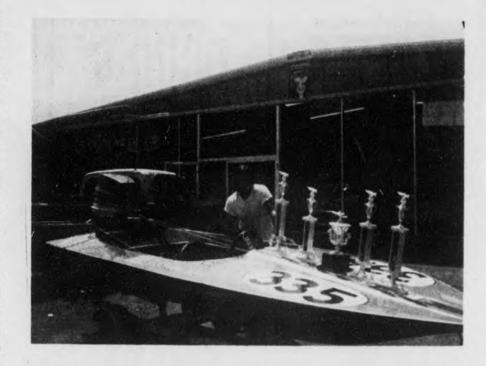

The energy crisis apparently helped to reduce the number of accidents in 1974, the Institute says.

In Alabama, there were a total of 117 accidents, involving 50 deaths, 37 injuries and $156,000 in property damage in 1974.

This year, with the are in good order. decreased importance of the energy crisis in the minds of America's boating enthusiasts, the improvement in accident statistics encountered in 1974 may not be repeated if basic safety measures are not followed, warns the Institute.

THE RIGHT VESSEL Scissors were not designed to cut a lawn, and likewise, certain types of boats are not designed for every condition.

The Institute notes that no matter how well designed and engineered a boat is, using it in the wrong waters, or trying to and working order of exceed the limitation of speed navigation lights, sound or capacity for which it was producing devices, anchors and people. More length can also be gained by forming a human chain.

If a drowning person is further out in the water, Carmichael said that he teaches his swimming students to throw anything they can get their hands on to the struggling person. Life jacket, buoys, ice chests, gasoline cans, water jugs, a football or volleyball, logs, etc., will all keep a person

"out-of- town" guest speaker chosen to deliver a baccalaureate address. We remembered that this "distinguished guest speaker" was supposed to be an authority on all subjects. He was also presumed to hold the key to the solution of all the problems the seniors might encounter on their way into the "main stream of life". Butas far as my memory goes regarding these historic occasions, the out of town celebrity -- while looking over his glasses at the future citizens of Tomorrow -- invariably left them "standing at the cross-roads". Just where this place is - or was - located, we have never found out. It is not on any geographical map, but not many places on the map have received the wide publicity that has been accorded this historic place where the "seniors have been" left standing" thru the years! We do not recall the guest speaker ever offering them any challenge to enter various professions or make preparations for future careers. We do not remember the silver tongued orator ever offering any help in launching their ambitious dreams. No specific project mentioned was calculated to move them one step from the stand still position - at the Cross Roads!

So, as far as I am concerned, I think, doing away with this item on the agenda for Commencement is a splendid one. I doubt there will be any great number of people especially among those who have sat through these hectic Valley. oratorical flights - who will have any nostalgic urge for a return engagement.

What do you think? M.W.W. plight their troth "until death do us part". I feel this geature on their part in wanting me to share this "shining hour" is quite an honor. It is also interesting to have them tell me just what type musical program they want, whether traditional or the more modern version. Perhaps some special melody the couple has shared, they particularly request; and since it is their wedding, I think they should have what they want - that is - if it isn't too "far out" - I have had only one in this category that I could not go along with.

So, today became a happier occasion because of news received from one of my favorite "newly-weds" - Mr. and Mrs. Marvin Anderson Chandler Jr. (Jean Rasco) whoby the way, a few months ago had one of the prettiest church weddings we have ever seen in this town. Marvin and Jean were both students in Auburn when Cupid shot his little arrow in their direction. Now, Marvin has graduated with a degree in Geology and commissioned as a 2nd Lieutenant in the U.S. Army. He is currently stationed in Baumholder, Germany with the 8th Infantry Division. He will be on this assignment for the next four years. Jean will join him as soon as he can find suitable housing facilities. So, it is Auf Wiedersehn for a few years to Jean and Marvin Chandler until their mission " over there" is completed.

The Customized Skin Guide By now, I'm sure you've noticed that your skin takes very good care of you and truly requires very little in return, But, if continually abused, side effects will appear, such as blemishes, large pores, wrinkles, flakiness, roughness and a general lack of healthy color. Every skin requires and deserves a certain amount of your time and attention. Like the individual it covers, it too has a personality. We will go into detail on how to recognise these "skin personalities" and how to give each a skin- care routine that will help maintain the best possible at all times. The formulas are, of course, generalized for each skin "personality". You will be able to individualize these formulas further, just as you individualize hair conditioning and stying needs to more closely correspond with your patrons particular

Mortgage money--

Court decision...'Best news we've had in two years'

by Ralph W. Sears

Shelby County realtors, bankers and savings and loan officials are in general agreement that last Thursday's Supreme Court decision on mortgage interest rates is likely to open the way for a activity of the county.

Last Thursday, Alabama's Supreme Court reversed an earlier ruling and held that the interest rates on mortgage loans are governed by the so-called mini- code enacted by the legislature in 1971, and not by Alabama's older usury law.

The usury law fixes the maximum interest rate at eight per cent annually, but the mini- code permits higher rates.

Burgess is not asking that the road be closed as some residents in the Pea Ridge-Boothton area had feared. The Gurnee Junction Road

Proposed bank run by outsiders

Letter to Editor:

I read in your paper that a National Bank had received preliminary approval to set-up in Pelham.

In the article about this National Bank was a lot of talk about it being owned and operated by "home-folks". Of all those named, I do not recognize a single one who lives in the Pelham area.

For years we did not have a bank here, so a group of truly local people, including the Mayor, worked for several years to establish the Bank of Pelham which very well serves our needs.

Several things come to my mind about this National Bank being put here by "out-siders" not Home-folks. We all know that the big Birmingham banks have all built branches almost down to Shelby County, however, because of State Law they cannot cross the county line. I have been wondering if maybe one of the Big Birmingham Banks is not behind the promotion of this National Bank.

If you look at the make-up of the group trying to set-up this bank you will see that they obviously had strong political influence. I have heard that politically inspired banks are not always the most successful ones.

It seems to me that we may have some out-side business men who are primarily interested in the financial aspect of this area rather than an interest in serving a local

Voter alienation denied by reader

Much is spoken these days about public alienation and cynicism toward politics and government. The analyists and pollsters are telling us that the people just don't care anymore.

I don't believe it.

In fact, the evidence seems to point the other way. Last month in California, Shirley Pettis scored an almost unprecedented special election victory in a 13-way Congressional race -- with the aid of hundreds of enthusiastic volunteers from all over the state. These people are the same Republican volunteers who donate hardearned money and contribute unselfishly of their time year

The cynics, of course, ask why. They believe that deep down no one makes this kind of sacrifice without assurance of material reward

But the truth is that these volunteers and thousands like them across the country expect only one thing for their time and effort - good government.

They expect to earn by their work a government dedicated to basic faith in the worth of the individual; a government dedicated to belief that free individuals can solve problems and accomplish things that government

They believe -- and would hope their government believes - as Lincoln did that "in all that the people can individually do for themselves, government ought not to interfere.

Modernization needed for Mobile state docks

Can we have expansion and modernization of our Alabama State Docks without additional taxes?

If the voters of Alabama approve the general obligation bond issue (Amendment No. 1) on June 10, $45 million will be available to upgrade our docks without any new taxes. This project is vital to the future economic growth of our entire state. Alabama's vast and far- reaching system of waterways make this a project of interest to people in all sections of the State. The economic benefits and return of an improved port will be shared statewide. It will mean more jobs for Alabamians.

The completion of the Tennessee-Tombigbee Waterway is just a few years away. It could be as early as 1980-81. This will make Alabama the traffic and commerce center for better than 20 mid- American States. Even with present tonnage, our docks are often pushed beyond capacity, and when we consider the development of the Tennessee- Tombigbee, the Chattahoochee- Apalachicola and the Coosa/Alabama water systems, it si readily apparent that the improvement and expansion project of our docks is absolutely necessary.

Also, our State Docks system is most vital to agriculture. In recent years, our farmers have flooded existing facilities with record shipments of soybeans and grains. We hope they continue and our agriculture experts say that farm exports are sure to increase.

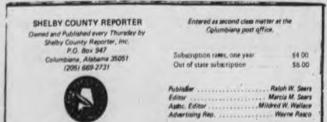

Again, let me emphasize that passage of a bond issue for the State Docks will not bring additional taxes, but it will bring added growth - jobs.

I hope that you and the people of your community will vote yes on Amendment No. 1. I will! It would greatly assist our effort if you could continue to support the bond issue and help in enlisting the support of the people in your area. With kindest regards, I am

Sincerely, George C. Wallace Governor

Voters to consider docks, sessions

by Don Wasson

MONTGOMERY - - The Legislature is off and running on Goat Hill again, this time for the rest of the summer, but the most important question facing Alabamians at present is the $45 million docks bond issue to be voted on June 10.

Because there are just two constitutional questions on the ballot -- the bonds issue is Amendment 1 and the annual sessions of the legislature question is Amendment No. 2 proponents of the bond issue are afraid it will be buried under a wave of sentiment against the annual sessions issue. We can all hope that Alabamians do not troop to the polls with a determination to vote "no" on everything just because they're dead-set against one thing.

The expansion of the state docks facilities at Mobile is too important to the future of this state for the necessary funding to fail simply because the people are fed up with

In a very short time now, that long-awaited Tennessee- Tombigbee Waterway is going to be completed, sending downriver to Mobile the manufactured goods, raw materials and produce of mid-America. It is safe to forecast that tonnage shipped through Mobile will triple in the first year the waterway is in use.

It would be a disaster for this state if the state docks facilities are not adequate to handle this huge increase.

Possibly the most important point to remember is that this bond issue will not cost Alabama taxpayers a red cent. Proceeds of the increased business at the docks are pledged to retire them. The bond issue was made a general obligation bond issue, requiring a vote of the people, simply to get a better rate of interest on the bonds.

As "G.O." bonds, they have the full faith and credit of the state behind them and are thus more attractive to the investment trusts which purchase such bond issues.

As for the annual sessions question, it again faces the opposition of many special interest groups and does not appear to have much of an organized effort going for it.

Many lobbyists say that they could support an annual meeting of the legislature if the body first set its two houses in order, providing the kind of rules and regulations which would make legislating an orderly business instead of a game of power politics.

It takes a lot of maneuvering behind the scenes today to get any particular bill passed, or killed and lobbyists are convinced that less bad news will happen to them when the legislature meets every two years.

Alabama voters turned down the annual sessions bill in 1973 and it appears likely that they will do the same thing this year. Had the new legislature really embarked on a program to improve itself, then public support might have been with them on annual sessions. But apparently the voters feel that annual sessions would be a waste of time and money when the lawmakers can't seem to get a week without a senseless Senate filibuster, in which the will of a small handful is imposed upon the will of the majority. Despite what the people think about the Legislature, however, that body did pass the enabling legislation which brings the docks bond issue to a vote on June 10. It is a matter which deserves public approval.

It would be too bad, indeed, if the measure should fail just because the public has a mad going with the legislative branch of government.

Ala. education forecasted to make turn to quality

by Don Wasson

MONTGOMERY - This may be the year in which the attention of educational leaders is turned from empire building to quality education of the children.

Ever since the disastrous years of pro-ration, in the latter part of the John Patterson administration, there has been a turning away from mediocre education. The courtordered desegregation of public schools may someday prove to be a blessing to Alabamians, if from none other than an economic viewpoint.

For years the state supported a dual school system. This was in an era when the state could barely afford a single school system. As a consequence, none of the public schools were much to write home about except in a few isolated cases in the higher-income neighborhoods.

The Alabama Education Association saw the need for young, dynamic leadership and Dr. Paul Hubbert was brought in as executive secretary and things began moving. But in Hubbert's reign (he is often referred to in legislative halls as "Governor Hubbert" or even "Pope Paul" and dislikes them both), far more attention has been paid to the improvement of the lot of the teacher than the lot of the school child.

Teacher pay in Alabama has gone up at as fast a pace as any state in the nation.

Teachers have been clamoring for a reduction in the classroom load, aiming toward a 25-to-1 ratio.

All of this is admirable, and Hubbert isn't to be faulted for making the teacher's load lighter and pay higher. But an incident in the recent education budget hearings points up the problem. Members of the combined Interim Finance and Taxation Committee were quizzing State Supt. of Education Dr. LeRoy Brown and his fiscal officer, Zeke Kimbrough, about the 1,800 additional teacher units authorized in the last appropriation (the budget that runs through Sept. 30 of this year.) That was supposed to lower the classroom load considerably but neither Brown nor Kimbrough could tell the committee where those additional teachers were assigned.

They admitted under questioning that many of the authorized positions were used for supportive personnel non-teaching positions but positions which could, theoretically at least, free a teacher for more teaching and less bookkeeping and baby sitting type duties.

Education is back again this year, asking for more teacher units to lower the classroom pupil- teacher ratio.

It is little wonder, then, that the legislature ordered the education chiefs back to their drawing boards to design a budget that is sensible and reflects some of the general belt- tightening everybody is talking about.

There have been moves in the past to upgrade teacher quality but the legislature is hamstrung each time by the educational theorists who say you can't design a test for teacher efficiency.

That may be true, but it appears that this legislature is going to come up with something. When the education appropriations bill hits the hopper, whether in a special session or in the regular session, it will be safe to bet that there will be some sharp paring.

And whatever the appropriation bill turns out to be. the education nabobs had better be prepared to account for every penny of it when the next biennial budget hearings roll around.

Both remain dull--

When I was a student at the University of Montevallo in the early sixties, I had as my transportation an old black Packard. It was one of the small Clipper models, a straight-eight two-door beast that was as tough as a tank. My dad once knocked a pick-up truck all the way across an intersection with it when the truck failed to stop for a light. Totalled the truck. The front of the Packard was bent a

Than old car had many qualities that marked it as an individual. It could burn a quart of oil a day and yet get 20 miles to the gallon. To go into second gear, you pulled the gear shift out of first into neutral, then let it drift all by itself over to a spot just below second, and slam it quickly into gear before it could drift back. If that procedure wasn't followed exactly, the gears hung up and it was necessary to get out, open the hood, and fiddle with them

Another characteristic of that car was not matter how hard I washed and polished it, it still looked a mess. Inspired by my fellow students shining their late model cars to a blinding glare, I would pull the Packard behind Napier Hall and spend an hour or so rubbing and rubbing. The only shine would come from the water as it ran over the tired old body. The Packard just wouldn't shine like everybody else's

I discovered last week that my Packard has come back to haunt me. It's taken the form of my yard.

All spring I've admired the neighboring yards on my block. Each one is clean and neat, little bushes are nestled in soft brown soil, hedges are clipped straight and close, sidewalks are lined with small plants, and the grass is like carpet. I watch my neighbors working in these yards and creating this pretty atmosphere and I think, "I can do

Well, I can't. No more than I could get that Packard to shine up. I went to work on my front yard last week determined to keep up with my neighbors. I had a pitchfork to dig up the jungle grown up in the bushes next to my house, a hand saw to cut down anything too big to dig up, and a pair of hedge clippers which I never got around to using

I started on the left side of the house. Working carefully around my azaleas which ignored me completely, I dug and cut and trimmed and tossed what seemed like forty pounds of superfluous weed and greenery into the front yard. Everytime I got one batch of unwanted growth up, I found another one. When I got it all cleared from one small spot, there would be another area that looked even more overgrown. I didn't notice the clock when I started but I must have been outside at least half a day trying to find the soft brown soil that my neighbors have. Apparently all I have are weeds growing in weeds.

I finally decided I had gotten all the growth I could possibly get and I would step out to the street to see how it looked. I shouldn't have. After hours of backbreaking work, it still looked exactly the same. I think everything grew back while I was walking to the street.

Packard. It's growing in my front yard.

State small businesses recognized May 25 - 31

Small Businesses are being recognized this week, throughout Alabama.

By an official proclamation of the Governor, the week of May 25 - 31 has been designated Small Business Week in Alabama.

Small business is as old as America. It has been a vital part of American life from the very beginning. Following in the footsteps of frontiersmen came the first commercial pioneers - the merchant, the miller, the blacksmith, the craftsman - the little guys who started it all. Out of the estimated 9.7 million businesses in America today, more than 9 million are small. They account for nearly half of the gross national product, and more than half of the business labor force. The American success story could never have been achieved and would not continue without this impressive contribution by small business.

Medicaid facing crisis

About the time the Legislature gets back to serious business at the end of the month, State Medicaid Officials will be sending out about six thousand alarming notices to nursing homes, hospitals and physicians around Alabama. The notices will say that the State Medicaid Office is going broke and may have to close up shop in July until October. That's the way the State's Medicaid Chief, Doctor

Robert Holzworth, describes his Department's financial crisis if the Legislature doesn't tackle the funding problem immediately when it returns next Tuesday.

And even if the Legislature gives a quick rubber stamp to an eight million 700 thousand dollar emergency appropriation, a ten per cent cutback will go into effect anyway. The ten per cent cutback is part of the emergency appropriations bill which Governor George Wallace has given approval to. The cutback would be across the board and would hit hardest the indigent elderly in Alabama nursing homes. An indigent person, for example, who is in a nursing home that charges five hundred dollars a month, currently has the monthly bill paid in full by medicaid. A ten per cent cutback would mean that indigent patient would have to find about fifty dollars a month to remain under the nursing home's care.

Doctor Holzworth puts it this way: "Many of these people may have relatives to come to their aid. But some of the people will have to leave the nursing homes. That's what the medicaid crunch is all about."

Holzworth's office has been operating this year on a 150 million dollar budget, with the State footing about one-fourth of the bill. That money has virtually run out, with 40 million dollars more needed to keep the program intact until the end of the fiscal year, September 30th.

Ten million of the dollars would have to come from the State, but under the compromise plan only eight million, 700 thousand would be available, The ten per cent cutback would result from the reduced funding level.

I always knew I'd never be completely free of that

After 11 years--Busy mother gets degree

by Nancy Duncan It took a lot of planning and perserverance, but Jacqueline McGuire of Alabaster has at last received the degree in Education she started working for eleven years ago. The mother of two children began her college career as soon as she finished high school, attending summer classes at the University of

two semesters at the school she was lured away by the prospect of marriage to a young fellow by the name of James McGuire.

Three years later when Ricky, their firstborn, had a little age on him, Jackie returned to school, determined to complete her education and become an elementary school teacher.

Then, about halfway along the road to graduation, she stopped to have Leanne, a frisky five- year-old who shared honors with her mother by graduating from kindergarten last week.

When Leanne was three, Jackie resumed her work toward that coveted degree, commuting to the University for two consecutive years. She received her B.S. Degree in Elementary Education on May

It took a lot of scheduleand still fill her role as mother and homemaker, Jackie admits, saying that outside projects and assignments which required research at the library presented the greatest problem.

"It was hard to work it all in between 8:00 and 3:00 sometimes," she commented, but she always managed to make it home by the time Ricky got in from school.

"Some of the time I had one day a week free, which helped me get some housework done," she added.

The daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John A. Morton of Indian Springs, Jackie got a lot of babysitting assistance from her MOTHER, DAUGHTER GRADUATE - - Jackie McGuire of Alabaster shared graduation honors with her daughter, Leanne this month. While her Mom was attending school at the University of Montevallo, Leanne was enrolled in kindergarten from which she "graduated" last week.

Ricky and Leanne thought it perfectly natural for Mom to be going off to school each day as they were. Ricky is a fourth grader at Thompson Elementary School and Leanne attended nursery school before entering kindergarten. About her husband's reaction to her persistent pursuit of a college degree, Jackie said, "He knew I have always wanted to teach and he has been pretty good to put up

Now that she had graduated, Jackie said she wants very much to teach. "I juggling to attend classes, study have it in my head that I want to teach first grade," she

Don't Kill the Mockingbirds!

As far as we are concerned we would feel that we had been deprived of much that makes each morning a delight if our mocking bird failed to run the gamut of a Spring's caprice.

So, parents of these youthful Nimrods, please ask them not to shoot the birds in our town. It is not only dangerous with children

Flag signals man's illness

J. C. Walton, custodian of the courthouse and grounds for the past 25 years, continues ill at his home in Columbiana. Perhaps this absence from his post of duty at the courthouse is responsible for no flag flown from the pole on the counthouse grounds. Mr. Walton was always on the alert for the flag being raised and lowered daily. It is regrettable that the unconquered red, white and blue banner has not been unfurled during the past week. It has been suggested that this gesture of patiotism be put back in practice or take the stark weather blackened, bare pole down! This pole - in trimmed headpiece. She carried its present position with no flag being flown, does look a bit out of place as it stands silent sentinel over the Memorial Monument where the names are engraved of those who gave their lives in order maid of honor. Dry Skin Determining dry skin - dry skin is not necessarily found on just the mature woman. It can also be the problem of a young skin. Dry skin is usually found on a natural blue- eyed blonde with refined pores. The skin- color is usually very fair, and they have a tendency to burn easily in the sun. The skin's obvious signs are peeling or flaking, chaps easily and a general all-over taut feeling (especially after washing with soap and water). Dry skin can be promoted by many things: a systemic malfunction of the oil- producing (sebaceous) glands, environmental conditions such as a dry climate, the sun, snow, wind and indoor heating systems, and even certain medications. Dry skin rarely breaks out in blemishes and is not prone toward acne. (Note person with dry skin should avoid too much exposure to the sun) moisturizing skin balancer Directions for dry skin: deep cleansing creme - massage gently in circular motions, also creme the throat. Because of its gentle and light consistency, the deep cleansing creme is recommended for eye make-up removal - remove with a warm washcloth, followed by a splash of cool water. Since dry skin usually has a tendency to be sensitive, apply the toning skin freshener to a pre-moistened washcloth, then wipe gently. Apply the moisturizing skin balancer as lavishly as desired .

including the eye area. Prior to using the firming facila masque, massage with proderma or creme concentrate (paying particular attention to the excessively dry areas - this is done for the stimulation so necessary to dry skin). Apply the masque directly over the creme. Remove the masque by placing a warm washcloth over the face for 30 seconds to soften the masque, then gently wipe away. Follow with the toning skin freshener and the proderma or creme concentrate (the masque should be done at least once a week.)

Yeager added that if special members were allowed equal voice in all matters before the planning commission, such arrangement would be inoperable. In the event that every beat be given two special members, the seven- man board would be saddled with more than fifty members. Yeager said that he imagined something would be done long before the situation got that extreme.

The proposed changes in calling zoning elections have grown out of past experiences in the county. Beat 12 has seen four elections where zoning was voted down, the last two only four months apart. The voters in the Valleydale-Cahaba Valley beat experienced months of controversy.

All the universities felt the effects of the governor's paring knife. Troy asked for an ambitious $21 million for the biennium, and the governor reduced that to $11 million.

Jacksonville sought $20 million, but the governor has something like $14 million in mind for that school.

Livingston asked about $6 million and the governor cut it to about $4.7 million.

The University of North Alabama - formerly Florence had $15½ million in mind, but governor suggests something closer to $9.8

Wallace stressed the urgent needs of Medicare, prisons, mental health and roads, all of which get their money from the General Fund. Ninety percent of the General Fund is earmarked for specific use, and Wallace feels more freedom in spending would ease the executive burden of disbursement.

"Roads", he said, "are necessary for health and safety, trade and commerce. To those who say I'm neglecting the Wallace's proposal has school children for roads, I say you get commerce and industry in the state, which pays taxes and raises the educational level."

Mental health is in desperate need of financial help, he said, and Medicare needs funding as well as rightening. Abuses in the Food Stamp program were questioned, and Wallace admitted the need to crack down on administrators as well as to screen more carefully food stamp recipients.

The need for the funds is crucial, Wallace said, and the only other source for the funds is raising taxes. He called this solution "politically impossible", and said the 12% he hopes to transfer from the Educational Trust Fund will remain in the General Fund indefinitely.

As the people's representative, Wallace claimed to have the right to decide to spend the people's money. "There is nothing more sacrosanct than the people of this state," he concluded.

MONTGOMERY -- From an historical standpoint, iov. George C. Wallace's "State of the State" address to ne legislature last week may someday rate higher than any f the previous bombastic messages he has delivered in the

The governor's message was received with less than vholehearted enthusiasm in the legislature and there were nany flat- footed forecasts that it would never pass.

But as the summer wears on, it is very probable that he lawmakers will begin to see that the governor really offered them the only way out of a real dilemma.

In proposing to "divert" some of the revenues which are presently earmarked for education, the governor was entering a real bruhaha and the echoes of his remarks had hardly died before the Alabama Educational Association's lobbying team was at work trying to punch holes in the governor's plan.

Basically, here is the problem:

About 80 per cent of all taxes collected in Alabama are "earmarked" for a specific use. The overwhelming bulk of these revenues are earmarked for education - specifically the sales and use tax. The Income tax is earmarked even further - in that it must be used to pay teacher salaries.

AEA takes the position that the huge collections of revenue earmarked for education is "our money" and that it cannot be spent for any other government service. AEA argues, and rightly so, that it was through their efforts that the taxes, and increases in those taxes over the years, were imposed "for education" and that it would be unfair for other agencies to now reap the benefits.

But numerous legislators are not swayed by this argument - the question is not one of what's fair, but rather one of how to solve the funds crisis for those agencies of government which are under extreme pressure to comply with federal court orders to improve both their facilities and services.

The tax revenues which pour into state coffers do not belong to any one segment of government. With those revenues, the legislature is supposed to provide ALL the services and facilities the public demands.

The public would first demand a quality school system, something we do not yet have, and the present division of revenues reflects that sentiment. Also having high priorities are the areas of public health, mental health, public safety including correctional institutions, welfare, highways and general government.

The chart accompanying this article shows from whence come the taxes and how they are disbursed.

The argument between the administration and the AEA will very like have a salubrious effect -- the "un-earmarking" of all taxes."

Those taxes which accrue in the educational fund are taxes which rise and fall as the economy rises and falls. But the taxes which go into the general fund, to support all other facets of governor, are fairly stable.

It is difficult, therefore, for the general fund agencies to meet the growing demands for facilities and services, while the education funds comes to the end of each biennium with a huge surplus. The governor's move to equalize this situation is a wise one and it is almost certain that the legislature will soon see the light.

I've recently learned a very valuable lesson and I'm reminded of it every time I look in a mirror.

Never discuss economics with your barber. Actually, I wasn't discussing economics. I was trying to read about electric cars in a magazine while my hair was being trimmed. I made my mistake when I mentioned the price of one of the little cars.

"It's rediculous!", he screamed in my ear, "Everything costs so much now! And do you know why?"

I, of course, not only didn't know but didn't care. I wanted to see how far the electric car would go with one

"I'll tell you why!", he continued. "It's because THEY make us want more than what we can pay for!"

I had just gotten to the part that discussed handling and manuverability when he reached his crescendo and I noticed there was something on the page blocking my vision. It was a big hunk of hair.

"THEY tell us that we have to keep up with the Joneses' so we buy more and more!" He was clearly agitated by now and louder he talked, the faster the scissors

"THEY say that we're not concerned about the economy. Well, I'M concerned. I'm concerned all right." I was growing a little concerned myself but not about the economy. I had enough hair lying around me to make a "Actually," I ventured gently in an attempt to calm him down and salvage something of my appearance, "I've found that I have more money available now than I used "It's people like you that are causing a lot of the trouble!" he yelled viciously. "I'm buying a house that I don't need and can't afford and I've got that big gas-eating car and do you know what I had to pay for shampoo last

I had to admit that I didn't.

"Nineteen dollars! Nineteen dollars for shampoo! And you've got more money than you ever had!"

I told him immediately that I was sorry. I was, too. I'd been growing that hair for a long time. Now it was lying limply all around me.

"I don't guess it's your fault," he conceded. I heard the clippers start. "You can't help it if you don't spend your money like the rest of us." I listened to the powerful electric hum as the clippers slid up my neck into what was left of the hair on the back of my head. "Even though THEY say we should put our money back into the economy, I can't blame you for hoarding yours." There was a deep satisfied gurgle from the clippers as the blades sliced into another heavy clump of hair.

I tried to explain that I really wasn't hoarding my money. I was just making more than I used to.

"Don't worry. It's okay. I've known people like you and some of them are all right. Your haircut's finished."

"Now you're complaining about the haircut," he said, lopping it off with a swish of his razor. "You people are all

Approximately 2.5 million Americans are today being deprived of the benefits they have earned by paying into the Social Security System. Because of the "earnings limitation" which was first written into the Social Security program in 1954, a penalty is imposed on any Social Security recipient who receives more than $2,520 in salary

The injustice is striking! The person who needs to continue working is penalized, but the person who has income, even substantial income from investments, is not penalized. Thus the person over 65 who is able and desirous of continuing to work and be productive or who needs to work as a matter of economic survival, must surrender $1 os his Social Security payments for every $2 earned over the low ceiling of $2,520.

Congressman John B. Anderson of Illinois, who wants to remove the earnings limitation, said: "Since the earnings limitation was added to the Social Security Act in 1954 it has contradicted a basic tenet of the system: that benefits are paid as a matter of right to those who have worked for them. Social Security recipients are not charity cases. The present wealth of this country has been purchased in a large part by the sacrifices of Americans in this age- group. These citizens have worked all their lives, often at low wages, and paid into the Social Security System. I am convinced that we are breaking faith with them if we do not allow them the right to earn what they can without being denied the benefits they have worked for."

There have been others who spoke out in the same manner for the abolition of the earnings limitation. One of these if Senator Barry Goldwater, one of the most respected members of that chamber. He has argued that it is an injustice against those who have worked and paid into the Social Security System to penalize them because they continue working, either from desire or necessity.

Senator Goldwater pointed out some months ago that this provision of the Social Security Act robs the nation of the services of a valuable and experienced group of people who could contribute much to the productivity of the nation. Rather than lose their Social Security benefits they have stopped working or are only working part of the time.

What we need to remember in the first place is that people working under the Social Security system have paid in money which is supposed to guarantee them payments when they reach retirement age, not when they retire. An insurance policy which promises payment as a certain age is not affected by whether the recipient works and earns or does not work. The money is paid as the policy promises.

It should be the same way with our government sponsored Social Security, and that was the way it was until 1954. There was no earnings limitation prior to that year.

Social Security was not planned to be a complete retirement income, but was to supplement that which was earned or saved to provide better financial security for the elderly and the disabled. It is difficult to call it a supplement when it automatically curtails the right to unlimited earnings.

People all across our nation would do well to demand that Congress eliminate this earnings limitation and permit those Social Security recipients who are able and willing to work to earn as much as they can.

Law enforcement is rewarding career

Letter to Editor:

June will be a month of great decision for a large number of graduating youth. They will face the frequently hard prospect, for most persons, of choosing and pursuing a career. To many, this decision may be the most important

I am often asked for career advice and have no hesitancy in recommending to any interested young person a career as a law enforcement officer. The profession has given me a great sense of personal satisfaction. Although it is both a livelihood and an adventure., law enforcement is much more than just these. For me, it has been a rewarding opportunity to do something special with my life. Law enforcement has done something special for the lives of many others and can do it for many more.

The law enforcement profession offers two great qualities in life which have captured the imagination of ambitious and perceptive youth during all periods in our history. These are the excitement of challenge and the satisfaction of meaningful accomplishment. There is rarely a day when a law enforcement officer does not find both.

If we look far ahead, as youth certainly must, these two qualities - the challenge and accomplishment - take on huge dimensions for the future. There are, for example, few greater long-range threats to our society than the looming specter of crime. And there is no more worthwhile goal than the just, orderly, secure, and creative society that respect for the law can inspire. Young people should put aside the derring-do television, cinema, and novelist's image of the law enforcement officer. While there is plenty in police work to reinforce this stereotype, the law enforcement mission is too profound for just courageous, decisive, and dynamic individuals. It also needs persons with intelligence, compassion, and vision.

For those young people who earnestly want a better tomorrow for themselves and their country, there are few greater opportunities to work for it than by enlisting their talents in the law enforcement effort. Of the priorities facing our Nation, the search for a more lawful society is surely one of the most vexing.

The Alabama Labor Council, which represents the AFL-CIO, is urging its members to turn our in full force and support the annual sessions amendment. The council president, Barney Weeks, says annual meetings of the Legislature instead of the present every-other year sessions would save the taxpayers money and also give the Legislature itself more flexibility.

Weeks said in a statement Monday that the present sessions last too long, usually four months or more, and too many bills are introduced at one session. He says that doesn't give the Legislature the opportunity for the in-depth study which he says should be made.

Another organization led by former State Senator Jimmy Branyon of Fayette is campaigning against the amendment, contending it would cost the State more

The Cattlemen say the Docks are of "tremendous importance" to the agricultural industry in Alabama.

Under a resolution adopted during a recent special session, the Alabama Legislature is committed to meet only on Tuesday and Thursday of each week. But next Tuesday is the day the voters will decide on the Docks bond issue and the annual sessions amendments, and the Legislators want to be at home that day so they can vote. ### Movements aim at law repeal

From time to time the Alabama Legislature struggles for weeks to achieve what appears at the time to be a lofty objective, and then decides later that maybe it wasn't so

The result quite often is the growth of a rebellious repeal movement to undo whatever it was the Legislature regarded earlier as necessary to do.

There is evidence of three repeal movements in the Legislature right now, involving the State Ethics Law, the Judicial Reform Amendment to the State Constitution, and to coordinate and supervise the operations of the institutions of higher learning. It may be that none of the three repeal movements will be successful, but they will leave their mark.

There has been some resentment over the ethics law since its passage in 1973. In fact, a judge in Montgomery ruled that the law was put together so haphazardly that it cannot legally apply to city and county officials as it is the Commission on Higher Education created six years ago

Unsuccessful attempts to rewrite the law were made during the most recent special session of the Legislature, but it was evident that House members particularly are feeling the pressures from the local governments back home. Before the proposed new law was dropped altogether, it had been changed to make sure that members of city and county advisory boards were not covered.

And now, in the regular session, a bill has been introduced to abolish the Ethics Commission and apply the law only to members of the Legislature. They would make reports of financial interests but only to the House and

Efforts are underway to submit another Constitutional Amendment to repeal the Judicial Reform Amendment ratified by the people in 1972. Criticism is based mostly on the argument that the new system of courts created by the 1972 amendment will cost the state

And there is resentment against the Commission on Higher Education. It may survive, but it may have difficulty getting the funds and the authority it wants to do its job.

Rev. E.B. Teague, one of the first residents of Shelby county and long since deceased, described the people who first moved here:

"The first settlers of our county, mostly from the rural districts of South Carolina, North Carolina, Tennessee and Georgia were a stubborn race, flattering and fearing none, who would shake hands with a king on his throne and think it kindness to his majesty. Men were esteemed according to character, not outward appearance. It was not their object to deserve esteem by probity.'

Dog poisoning cases reported in county.

dogs is apparently taking a very convulsions and struggling," he inhumane way to dispose of a portion of Shelby County's canine population.

Reports of several deaths resulting from strychnine poisoning have been circulating lately and Shelby County veterinarian Dr. Warren W. Kent, Jr. confirms that this has been happening. He said the dogs he has seen were from the Alabaster and Maylene area.

"We have had three of them within the last two or three weeks." Kent revealed. He added that a fourth dog brought to him with convulsions might have also gotten some of the poison but he was not able, upon examining the dog, to determine for sure is this were the cause.

Kent said there is the possibility that the dogs got some strychnine that wasn't actually intended for them. "I would like to think that it was an accident," he commented.

However, he continued, dog owners should take precautions against letting their happen to their pets. "People need to start keeping their dogs up, at least for awhile until we can find out where it (the poison)

Dr. Kent reported Tuesday afternoon that a poisoned dog had been brought to his office just the night before.

"Strychnine is a terrible poison and the dogs go through of poisoning in that area.

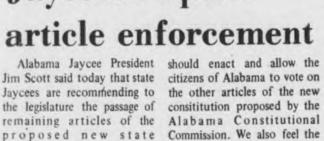

Someone who doesn't like a very hard death with a lot of said. "Most of them die unless we can get to them real quick."

The problem is not limited to the north Shelby area, it seems. Columbiana veterinarian Dr. C. H. Thornburg II said this week that he has treated one dog whose owner lives in the Columbiana city limits. "I know this dog had strychnine poisoning," he declared. Fortunately, he said, the owner brought the dog for treatment shortly after the symptoms developed.

Thornburg said he has been told by fox hunters of other apparent poisonings in the area of Waxahatchee Creek, where three dogs reportedly died in the woods. "They found some bacon strips around there, but the toxocology lab wouldn't run tests because no one had filed any charges," he said.

One of three major divisions of the laboratory's work today, he went on to say, is its inland fisheries research. This emphasizes the culture and propagation of fresh water fish, especially largemouth bass, Jackson said.

The inland research is basically physiological, he said, and deals with nutrition,

He added that the anadromous stripe have in recent years been introduced successfully into fresh water habitats.

One of the chief reasons for populating stripe into fresh water resevoirs was to control shad, which disrupt sports fishing, Jackson said. It was found that stripe adapted well in their new fresh water homes sport fishermen because of their large size.

A third area of concentration by the Marion laboratory is that of habitat preservation. The researchers are involved in studying various pollutants and toxicants and their effects on fish.

Of special interest, Jackson said, are the affects of the pesticides endrin and toxiphene. The laboratory researchers are currently investigating the effects of these common agricultural pesticides on largemouth bass and catfish.

Jackson pointed out that this information will have a large economic impact especially the catfish farmer who needs to reduce these toxicant traces to the lowest possibly level.

Jackson termed the work of the Marion fish culture station as "clinical" and explained that the researchers worked with fish in tanks. In conducting a tour of the tanks, Jackson noted the different behaviour of salt water striped bass, which are in a continuous state of motion and the largemouth bass, which lazily sit on the bottom of the tank except when feeding.

The researchers are careful to avoid contaminating the fish with diseases and often administer medicines to the water of the tanks. An infected fish will quickly spread the and became sought after by disease to the others in a tank, Jackson explained, thus spoiling an experiment.

The Marion laboratory has a staff of 12 including three fishery biologists and a chemist. It is directed by Dr. Blake I. Grant.

The laboratory is the only fish culture station operated by the U.S. Department of the Interior in the southeastern United States. It is located on state highway 175 adjacent to the Perry County Public Lake near Marion.

The varied musical programs they have You've dreamed of every day requested -- to make more memorable this "shining hour" - has been and continues to be - an interesting factor in making June a month to remember. It is a gloriously happy month filled with memories of star- lit skies, moonlight and roses etc. But time has also brought its changes in both music requested -- and, in some instances -- the spoken marital vows. One couple we remember changed the "age-old "Until death do us part" to "As long as love shall last". Another happily married "little two-some" used excerpts from Gilbran's well known: "The Prophet". All different -- but interesting! Unless the musical background is just "too far out" we always try and grant their requests. After all, it is their day -- their wedding -- so, why not?

However, we feel sure that all potential couples who have decided that "two can live as cheaply as one", will enjoy reading a poem sent me some time ago on this subject by one who evidently had, at some time along-the- way, been a "bride", and had dreams of "living happily ever after". It is

HOW TO BUDGET YOUR ELECTRIC BILL.

The amount of electricity you use each month is never exactly the same. Air conditioning in summer and electric heating in winter can make your electric bill go up. Other times it's down.

Up and down. Month to month. Season to season.

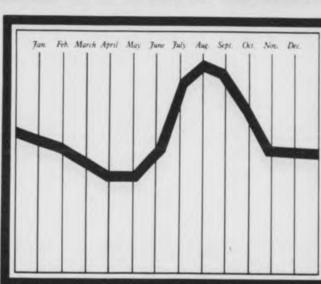

But you can keep your electric bill from changing like the weather. With Levelized Monthly Billing. A service from Alabama Power that lets you pay about the same amount each month, based on the number of kilowatt-hours of electricity you've used during the past year. It's simply a matter of an average use.

With Levelized Billing, you always know what to expect within a very few dollars. So you can budget your electric bills.

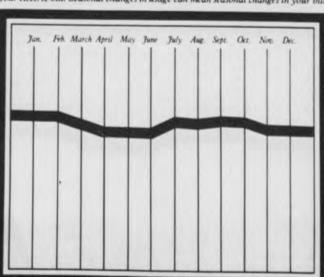

Ask about Levelized Monthly Billing at any Alabama Power office. Or send in the coupon below for a brochure explaining this service.

Knowing you can budget your electric bill can take the big ups and downs out of paying it.

So what is new in the valley? Well, for one thing, schools are out for the summer and mothers everywhere have been jolted abruptly out of their comfortable ruts. Little voices are constantly demanding, "Mama, can I . . . ? Huh, Mama, P-p-please? A-w-w-, why?"

This finally gets to Mother and her resistance crumbles completely. "So okay, get lost!" she replies.

You may as well relax and lower your voice a few octaves, Mom. After all, as you very well know, it's only just begun.

Julia says her garden club she founded has finally evolved into an arts and crafts club. That's really very nice and it must be fun learning to make all those pretty, artistic, useful little items.

Speaking of crafts, I notice Jenny Pittman is still crocheting away at her dark green woolen place mats. She can't decide whether to keep them or to sell them. She'll probably end up keeping them.

Capitol comment

by Don Wasson

MONTGOMERY -- The governor's proposal to shift revenues from the overly-healthy education fund to the seriously-ill general fund has stirred more comment in this political town than any other issue of recent years.

It was not unexpected, because many of the people in this political town are dedicated to the advancement of education, to the advancement of teacher benefits and for years they have jealously guarded education revenues.

And observers at the Capitol are freely predicting that the Wallace proposal will not win and to support this, they point to the abortive attempt, in 1971, to "borrow" rather heavily from the Teachers Retirement Fund.

But these two things should not be related, because they are entirely two different matters. In 1971, Wallace proposed a short term borrowing from the Retirement Fund, to be paid back with interest. But retirement funds are inviolate in the minds of most people, not only teachers, and opposition to the plan came from all quarters.

The diversion of 12 per cent of the revenues now pledged to education is different in that all tax money belongs to all the people, and the fact that some of the revenues are pledged to education does not mean that they "belong" to education nor that they are irrevocably pledged to education in perpetuity.

The state is charged wih providing certain services and facilities to the people, and education is but one service and school buildings are buy one type of facility

What has happened over the years is that education crises have developed from time to time special taxes have been levied to meet those crises. To make certain it wasn't used for some other purpose, the legislature "earmarked" the revenue specifically for education.

But those crises have eased and education is in no crisis of any kind. Indeed, while the mental health program, the prison system and the Medicaid program are in dire straits, education is sitting on a $140 million surplus which should be on hand at the end of this fiscal year on Sept. 30.

Quite naturally, education wants all that money. And under the Wallace program, they would get it. But if education taxes are producing that big a surplus every two years, the administration feels, then it's time to divert some education money to other causes.

The hysteria the proposal has created in education ranks has the legislature, at this moment, loudly proclaiming that the plan will not pass. But before the long, hot summer is over, it is likely that the legislature will

They have heard plenty of gaff from teachers on their time at home, and here in Montgomery, too. Right now, it overrides every other consideration. But the feeling grows that before long, they'll begin hearing from parents that diversion just might be the best answer.

It is not the only answer, of course. The legislature could impose a series of new taxes to bail out mental health, prisons and Medicaid. But they would have to produce some $85 million and would be felt immediately in pocketbooks already strained to the limit.

It appears that the legislature is on the verge of doing what Wallace has been advised to do for years - put all revenues in one big pot, forget the earmarking, and divide the money each year on a percentage basis. The role of the legislature would then be what it is supposed to be -determining the priorities for spending state revenues, on a

Senate schedule favors filibustering

No one apparently realized at the time that they would have a long lasting effect, but two resolutions adopted by the Alabama Legislature in previous sessions have made the Senate more vulnerable to filibustering than it has been in a quarter of a century.

Two years ago, the Senate, almost in a joking mood, approved what turned out to be a new rule which in effect compels the upper house to adjourn each day by five P.M. It prohibits the transaction of any business before eight A.M. and after five P.M.

The rule is still inforce, and it will be until the Senate votes to repeal it. Several attempts to do that have failed.

Another new rule was adopted during the last of the three special sessions earlier this year. It says the House and Senate can meet only on Tuesday and Thursday of each week. And like the five o'clock quitting time in the Senate, the Tuesday and Thursday restrictions has carried over into the current regular session. And it will stay in effect until rescinded.

Together, the two rules make it a lot easier to filibuster in the Senate. Traditionally, the Senate has been able to break its frequent filibusters by remaining in session around the clock, day after day. At one time years ago, the Senate was in continuous session for more than 100 hours without even a break for meals.

But the five o'clock and the Tuesday- and -Thursday rules have broken that up. With the help of only three or four colleagues, a filibustering senator can keep going

All he has to do is hold the floor throughout the day on Tuesday and again on Thursday and again the next Tuesday, and so on. And with the Senate's liberal policies on debate, that wouldn't be at all difficult.

The filibustering senator knows that when five o'clock comes, he's going to get at least one day's rest before he has to start talking again.

The pressure is increasing, however, to revoke the two new rules, and sooner or later, the Senate probably will be forced to agree to repeal or at least modify them. A resolution which would do away with the Tuesday and Thursday work schedule is pending in the rules committee, and representative Bobby Tom Crowe of Jasper introduced another in the House last week. House members are becoming fidgety because of the impending threat of a

If the rules are changed, it won't eliminate filibustering in the Senate. But it will make it more difficult and less inviting.

Good grief, says Cooper

by Fred Cooper

I have just got to stop reading the Reporter all the way through and stick to looking only at my column. Invariably, I find something that ruins my whole day.

For instance, in last week's issue, I learned that a new bank was being formed in Columbiana and one A. Neal Shirley was to be a director.

Neal Shirley, a bank director? Good grief!

I first met Neal when he was just a little older than I was and we were both at the University of Montevallo, then Alabama College. I knew that I had his number. When he lived in Ramsay, one of the oldest dorms, while I was firmly entrenched in the newest residence hall the college had to offer. He also seemed to always have these math books and papers and things he lugged with him everywhere. Clearly, a man behind on his schoolwork. He'll never graduate, I thought.

It wasn't until midsemester that I learned he had already graduated and was lugging the books and papers around because the administration had asked him to stay around and teach awhile. And he lived in Ramsay because he was running it.

No matter. Neal's and my careers have closely paralleled and I'm pleased to say that I have in almost every instance gotten the better of him.

In college, he clearly took a back seat. I sailed through with a 1.1 overall average while he was named to "Who's Who Among Students in American Colleges and Universities." I was active in intramurals and was sports editor of the college paper. Neal was not what you'd call an athlete although he did play well enough to have a sports trophy named in his honor in later years.

I ran for Senior Class President and would have won

Of consuming interest-health spa advertisement

by Annie Laurie Gunter

With summer and warm weather now upon us, we become more aware of our physical appearance. To remind us of our fatness or flabbiness, the advertisements and solicitations of health and beauty spas appear in increasing

Unfortunately, the promises of the advertisements often do not come true. In fact, deceptive practices are all too widespread in the areas of reducing salons, health clubs, and the related areas of dance studios (dance studios emphasize the learning of "grace,", "style," how to make friends, how to get along with the opposite sex, etc.). The abuses include deceptive and misleading advertising, high-pressure sales tactics, contract misrepresentations, incomplete service, and debt collection harassment.

Ads claiming"Anniversary Specials," "special introductory rates," and "limited time" offers are among the gimmicks offered by many of the spas. In some instances, the "special" rates and offers are nothing more than the usual and regular prices. In other instances, the specials serve as bait to get you to the salon or studio where you are given a high-pressure sales ptich to sign a long-term

The sales tactics are often even more hazardous for consumers than the advertising. Sales representatives Often claim that "this is the last day before membership fees go up" or "the introductory offer expires today so you must sign now." But some of the worst abuses are those that play upon the emotions and weaknesses. Some consumers have been frightened into signing contracts because of salesmen's claims that they will not be popular because they are fat. Deceptive claims of easy monthly payments are also used to induce consumers to sign long-term contracts.

To avoid the traps in the self-improvement field, the Governor's Office of Consumer Protection offers the Before you sign any contract, know following tips: exactly what you will get, how much it will cost, and how long the program will last. Ask to see the facilities and equipment and find out when they will be available to you. Talk to others who have taken the program to find out if they have been satisfied. Don't sign up with a spa that has not opened yet. * See your doctor before starting an exercise or diet program. And don't be taken in by so-called "guarantees" of weight loss or claims of weight reduction through the use of machines that simply vibrate or shake the body. * Never sign a long-term contract before you know if you will be happy with the club's program. Try to enroll on a pay-as-you-go basis or for a short period and if this is prohibited by the particular spa, reconsider joining the program. Ignore those discount, group, or package rates as well as other gimmicks to get you to sign a long-term contract. * Find out before you sign, if you will be able to cancel the contract if you change your mind, move, or are unable to continue the program for medical reasons. * Don't place any dependence on oral promises made by the salesman. Insist that all promises and agreements be written into the contract itself.

Don't sign a contract which you do not thoroughly understand or one that has blank spaces in it. Always get a signed copy of the contract for your own records.

handily except I only got 24 votes. Neal was never even in the running for Senior Class President. He was, of course, the first male president of AC's Student Government Association but not Senior Class President. No, sirree.

And after we graduated, I left him in the starting blocks. While he went to work for IBM, having collected a masters degree in mathematics, I charged to the forefront in the Air Force, being named an Airman First Class before I got out. And when Neal built a home in Chelsea, I was already tastefully decorating my apartment with borrowed

I really hate to compare the honors we have received since graduation. It's hardly fair. I have been considered for Poet Laureate of Alabama, a position I nominated myself for; I thought I was going to get Columnist of the Year last year and would have but three other people were named ahead of me; and if I hadn't gotten beaten 9-2 in the first round of the 1974 Male Alumni Tennis Tournament, I would probably have won a trophy.

Neal has barely been recognized. He has only to his credit being named one of the Outstanding Young Men of America, the University of Montevallo's Alumnus of the Year, and has picked up several IBM honors. He's simply not in my class.

I recall the occasion when Neal and I were initiated into the Alpha Tau Omega fraternity at UM as Honor Initiates. During the ceremony, it was necessary to be blindfolded and I had to follow Neal through certain paces with my hand on his shoulder. And after it was over, we were sitting on a couch and Neal leaned over to say something to me. I thought he was going to remark on the solemnity of the moment or the fact that after our long association, we were now fraternity brothers.

What he said was, "You put your dirty hand on the shoulder of my new beige sport coat."

How would you like to sit across a desk from a man like that and ask for a loan?

Who would have thought of Neal Shirley, Bank

Why you might as well think of Neal Shirley, President of the University of Montevallo. Hmmmmm.

In a brief interview with Sheriff C. P. (Red) Walker this morning, he made - in substance - the following statement: "I am still deeply engrossed in an attempt to solve the Kirby case. It is true we have been questioning a person who first stated they had 'witnessed the murder of Kirby'. This statement she later denied was true.

"We are now attempting to question others reported to have been involved. I have called in a State Investigator to assist me in further investigation."

"I am leaving no stone unturned as I continue my efforts to find the solution to what has been one of the most baffling cases I have handled since I became Sheriff of Shelby County."

Good morning

by Milton Bird

She was sitting on the back porch of her little house, rocking in an old rocker, watching a bunch of grass sparrows feeding along a little trail that led to her chicken

She stopped rocking when she saw me and said Howdy and started rocking again. She walked with a stick and it lay on the floor beside her chair. A crooked, hickory stick that looked as old as she did.

"Sticks are like folks," she said. "They get crooked and wrinkled and couldn't get along without folks to hold

The grass sparrows had fed out of sight down a little trail and she looked off in another direction toward an old crab apple tree. It was late April and the crab apple was in full bloom. The delicate pink blossoms moved in a little wind that took some of their fragrance and dropped it on

She sniffed, wrinkling her nose a little, and said: "You get and you give, the same as the wind and the crab apple tree, and sometimes I wonder if giving ain't better than getting'

That was the way she was, always thinking out loud, little thoughts that came at you unaware, little thoughts so profound you had to think about them before you took them in. This little lady who told me one day that from the main road to her little house in a pine thicket, it was 30 bluebirds and a dozen violet patches and more briar bushes than a soul could count.

"I think there are more than a dozen violet patches between here and the road this year," I said. "I never saw so many.

She looked at me then, the way she looked at the grass sparrows and the crab apple tree, her gaze slipped past me, feasting on something far off. "There's something about a violet patch and a road ..." she said, her voice trailing off.

I waited for her gaze to come back to the porch, while she rocked in her old rocker. Over the hill a rooster crowed. And a hen made a quick, cackling noise, as if she might have flown off the nest after laying her egg. I waited, while the little wind brought another dab of fragrance from the crab apple tree, but she just kept on rocking. The rooster crowed again. But the hen was silent now, probably pecking grass seed or scratching in the thick straw.

"All roads," she said after a little, "no matter where you go, will always turn to miss a violet patch."

Shelby cemetery group asks 'Please, no dumping'

Letter to Editor:

First, let me thank our many friends, black and white, for their interest in the upkeep of what is known as the Colored Cemetery in Shelby.

I am in full agreement that this upkeep is badly needed. I also know every person who has loved ones and friends buried here, should not criticize destructively -- but should get together and each do their share since we do not have a caretaker.

Some person or persons have recently been throwing old TV sets, stoves, trash, etc. in this cemetery which is certainly not a public Dump -- but a place for burial.

We, the Shelby Benevolence Club bought two acres of land from the Gulf States Co., joining the East portion of the land which is now being used for burial purposes.

So, I am taking this medium to request to everyone that they respect this property as a cemetery. Please do not throw trash and waste on these sacred grounds. To do so makes you subject to legal liability.

The trustees for this property are: Stokes Parker, chairman; Gilbert Kidd, Robert L. White.

Thanks in advance for cooperation on this matter I gratefully, Nellie C. White Rt. 1 Box 130 Shelby, Ala.

Wallace plans strategy in school funds struggle

Governor George Wallace, apparently sensing that his school tax diversion plan is in serious trouble in the Legislature, has initiated a series of regional meetings around the state to drum up grass roots support.

Wallace's executive secretary, Henry Steagall, says the Governor himself doesn't plan to attend the conferences, but his aides will be there and will urge Wallace supporters to put pressure on the House and Senate to pass the administation program.

The Governor wants to divert 12 percent of the proceeds from the sales and use taxes and use that revenue to help meet the urgent needs in Medicaid, mental health, the prisons, and the Highway Department.

But at the moment, there appears to be little likelihood that either the House or Senate will go along with him. In fact, even Lieutenant Governor Jere Beasley, who generally agrees with the administration, says he is opposed to school tax diversion.

The strategy in the regional meetings is to build up such strong support among the voters that the Legislature will have to listen. But the Alabama Education Association, which is leading the fight against the administration plan, also is making its own contacts throughout the state. And the AEA has repeatedly shown that it can be a politically powerful organization.

Columnist rides ferry during tour of state's small towns

We have read with keen interest in the Houston Post (May 20 issue) an interesting account of Leon Hale's trip through the "tiny towns along Alabama's Backroads". During Mr. Hale's pilgrimage through this part of Alabama he visited many "tiny towns" along the way which claimed his penpoint interest.

The article was brought to us by Jean Walker and proved so interesting we thought you might enjoy it -- so we decided to share a part of Mr. Hale's account of his trip through the heart of the deep south skirting around the big towns and enjoying those friendly little towns where there is always time out "for friendliness".

Here is the impression Mr. Hale received along the way

'On that Deep South vacation trip I took recently I went all the way across Alabama on narrow winding roads like the one that comes down to Texasville from Hurtsboro and Comer and Clayton. Just puttering along at 40 and 45, through Eunola, Graball, Peachburg, Three Notch, and

I sort of wanted to see Montgomery but it has the disadvantage, to my notion, that it sits astraddle two interstate highways. I've been trying to boycott interstate highways, except in cases of emergency - such as being in a hurry. The farther from home I travel, the more I feel that all states look the same when seen from a freeway.

So I stuck to the smaller Alabama roads, like the ones that go through Hokes Bluff, Coloma, Ballplay, Valley Head, Eastaboga, Ohatchee, and Wedowee.

At Sylacauga I stopped and spent the night just because I liked the name of the town. I mean how many times you gonna get the chance to sleep in a place named Sylacauga?

But there was another reason: At Sylacauga I ran into an old- style service station man, who hasn't heard that the service in 90 per cent of service stations has died. He came bouncing out of his station with a bug rag and a bottle of windshield spray and a tire gauge and a big grin and pretty near scared me. I'd forgotten how they did it, two years ago when they were still trying to make us believe they really cared. He spread a road map and told me how to get to Talladega Springs, and Calera, and Maylene, and Boothton, and then invited me to spend the night. Said they had a nice motel, and a good place to eat, and Sylacauga was a real clean town that needed the business. So I stayed.

Next morning I drove west to Talladega Springs on the Coosa River. There's a ferry there that you take if you want to cross and go on over to Columbiana. I had to wait a while for the boat to come get me on the east bank. It was carrying one pickup truck and the ferry operator was leaning against the cab talking to the driver. So when he was still 400 yards from his landing I already knew he was a

Ferry operators I've known are either Type 1 or Type 2. Type 1 is bored and wishes he worked somewhere else and doesn't want to talk. Type 2 is the opposite. He loves his work and wants to tell you his name and his life history and he loves his river and visits the entire world, by talking Solly Perkins is sure Type 2, all right. He keeps a sign on his boat that directs passengers to remain in their cars while the ferry is moving. As quick as I got parked on deck, here he came to announce I was welcome to get out and take pictures. He shook hands, gave his name, said he owned that piece of land right yonder on the west bank of the Coosa, that he doesn't make much money but he's five minutes from work every morning when he gets up, and he's got a pretty river to ride on.

He also said what they all say, even the Type 1's: That he's got kin in Houston. "All my life," Perkins said, grinning, "I've heard about the Brazos River. Well, finally I went to Texas and saw it. And said why, shoot, I could SPIT across THAT."

He looked out over his own river, and I saw what he meant. The Coosa isn't only pretty, at that point is must be half a mile wide. I was impressed. I'm not used to rivers I've crow-flying miles inland like there at Talladega Springs.

That afternoon I got to looking closer at the map, though, and noticed there's a dam on the Coosa about 10 miles downstream from the ferry. There isn't anything that enhances the width of a small stream like building a dam on

But I wanted to tell you some more of those Alabama town names I liked:

Riddleville, Ficklin, Ohoopee, Deepstep, Tusculum, Phinizy, Chicopee, Social Circle, Pocotaligo, Sulligent, Benevola, Eutaw, Dixiana, Sipsey, Coal Fire, Hissop Nixburg, Eclectic, Tensaw, Vinegar Bend (home of Wilmer Mizell - remember? Pitched for Houston Buffs and St. Louis Cards and the U. S. House of Representatives), Chunchula, Lower Peach Tree, Octagon, Clayhatchee, and then my favorite, little place about 65 miles east of Birmingham, called Choccolocco. I didn't go there because it's too close to Interstate 20.

Early in the Spring I took the advice of my nursery man and put "preemergant" dust on my garden walk so crabgrass wouldn't choke out my nice stand of ajuga between the stones. Well, it worked. I have no crabgrass there, nor do I have any ajuga. Apparently what works for the crabgrass works equally well for the ajuga. In it's place I have this creepy little green vine which threatens to cover everything in my garden, including the tenacious ivy which I was stupid enough to plant.

Some people make lovely gardens with no apparent effort at all. Take Carl Stapleton's, for instance. It's a rock garden and a work of art, all woodsy ferms and such, in complete harmony with the setting. I studied it and wondered.

A visit to Montevallo's wild flower garden is an ever- garden is infectious, and a changing treat for the eye and

As this season's spring flowers quietly go to seed, the summer are preparing to replace them. The driving force behind this natural display is Willilee Trumbauer, who began Alabama wildflowers. Now, with the city park for its nextgarden is a well- placed retreat sourwoods and sweet pepper for Montevallo citizens.

Mrs. Trumbauer has planted an almost countless variety of beautiful and interesting shrubs, trees and flowers, and something is always in bloom. "I keep a notebook of what blooms when," she said Tuesday," so that I can track the colors." Sure enough, yellow and orange blossoms at the entrance to the garden were testimony to her eye for bringing colors together. A cedar post fence is being planned, with an identifying sign, so that more people can find and appreciate the garden easily. Many have found it already, and Mrs. Trumbauer concluded the walk with a story of working one afternoon and suddenly noticing that a couple had been quietly sitting on a bench for some minutes. ### BEFORE YOU BUILD, IMPROVE OR BUY LAND AKOUND ALABAMA POWER COMPANY RESERVOIRS, DETERMINE HOW MUCH OF THE LANDWILL BE SUBJECT TO FLOODING.

Alabama Power Company has full ownership of lands in the permanent reservoir areas upstream from its dams. It also has a flood easement on certain lands above and outside of the permanent reservoir areas for the purpose of flooding these lands from time to time as may be required during flood periods for temporary storage of water. This temporary storage is necessary for the purpose of flood regulation and control which is required by its Federal Power Commission license.

WARNING

Property owners, builders or prospective purchasers of lots or acreage extending into the flood easement areas should learn how much of the property in which they are interested is situated on land between the top level of the permanent reservoirs and the top level of the flood easement areas since these areas are subject to flooding and will be flooded. The extent of Alabama Power Company's flood easement on any given tract of land can be determined by examining the public records in the court house of the county in which the land is located. With such information a competent surveyor can locate and stake the limits of the flood easement on the ground.

Alabama Power Company wants to see the lands above the flood easement of its reservoirs fully and attractively developed, but in a manner which will be safe, enjoyable and reasonable. However, Alabama Power Company cannot be responsible for injuries to persons or damages to any property or to any type of structure or improvement in the permanent reservoir areas or flood easement areas resulting from flooding. Please note that construction of dwelling houses, commercial establishments, dikes and fills and other improvements on the land in the permanent reservoir areas, as well as the flood easement areas, both covered by Federal Power Commission license, is not permitted. FUTURE STRUCTURES OR IMPROVEMENTS UNLAWFULLY PLACED IN SUCH AREAS WILL BE REQUIRED TO BE REMOVED FROM THE RESERVOIR AND FLOOD EASEMENT AREAS.

Observing the precaution of knowing how much of the land you plan to improve is in the flood easement area and avoiding construction within that area of any type of structure will eliminate the necessity of action on our part to protect our flood rights and will help make your experience in the development of the lot or acreage you own a pleasant one.

His guests are sometimes a bit far out, but for the most part, they are intelligent, interesting people with something to say or do.

Merv I believed in. With him I had my morning toast and coffee, and when his show ended, I would snap off my set for the rest of the day and go about my business, having had a chuckle or two and perhaps a sobering thought.

I believed in his sincerity. His boyish ways and impish grin belied the silver in his hair, and I, like millions across the nation, adored him. Recently, however, I found my idol has feet of clay. He let me down.

He had as a guest a prominent actor, Warren Beatty. Nevertheless, there are some things which turn me off in a short split second, one being filth for the sake of filth, be it vocal or active, and this show was pure garbage, with not one redeeming quality to make it worth a nickel, much less my three dollars.

Perhaps it had a story to tell. We didn't stay to find out. After the first sordid moments into the film, we left, nauseated. We tried eating a sandwich next door, but somehow our appetites had vanished.

The evening was young and noting the "G" rating on the other movie, we decided to chance it. I'm glad we did. It was like a fresh spring breeze blowing through the mind. It restored my faith in the ability of movie producers to put out pictures which leave one feeling happy and uplifted instead of dirty and despondent.

It was a love story, told simply and beautifully. It told of happiness, expectations, tragedy, courage, and despair ... but it was beautiful. It had a real story to tell and I felt better for having heard it.

Robert Scott on research weather team

Robert Scott of Montevallo, a graduate student at Florida State University is a member of an international weather observation and research team that recently received a special plaque from the National Oceanographic and Atmospheric Administration for the team's contribution to the Global Atlantic Tropical Experiment.

Scott and ten faculty and students from FSU spent most of last summer in or near Dakar, Senegal, on the west coast of Africa. While there, or aboard ships in the adjacent Atlantic they participated in an international field experiment gathering and analyzing data that relates to tropical weather events, including hurricanes.

Scott and his colleagues from FSU worked sideby-side, or ship-by- ship with scientists from Great Britain. France, West Germany, USSR and other countries. Scott spent most of his time processing and organizing data as it was brought in to the team's headquarters.

Purpose of the entire expendition is to obtain a better understanding of the weather not only in the tropical Atlantic, but in the entire Northern Hemisphere. . . . .

Another 'first shot' fired by Walker

Sheriff Red Walker has launched another broadside in his unrelenting campaign to gain control over the county

This time he is using the burglary issue in north Shelby County as the means for gaining the end.

The focus of Walker's attacks however, is not the treasury itself, but rather the man who serves as watchdog of the treasury, Commission Chairman Conrad Fowler.

His challenges to Fowler started many years ago and have taken different forms. In recent memory, there were attempts to stack the County Commission. Then there was the hassle over juvenile officers. Then came criticism over the appointment of the airport operator. Next came an all-out drive to remove Fowler as Commission Chairman by Legislative Act. Then the sheriff actually arrested Fowler in that celebrated case of last year.

Through all this Fowler keeps calm, works out a balanced budget annually, explains his actions in a steady almost professorial manner and keeps his hand on the controls. The controls include the budget of the sheriff's department, and this is where the friction starts.

What makes the county treasury attractive is that it is in very good shape. There is not long term debt - and the money to cover expenditures is at hand or nearby. In banking circles, the county's credit stands higher than that of most of the cities and counties in the nation.

Fowler is largely responsible for this state of affairs because the revenues and expenditures have been under his eye for the last 17 years.

And now, although the leaders of the group seeking to stop burglaries in north Shelby County stress that they do not want to get caught in "political crossfire" it seems that Walker is lighting the fuse again.

He went on television Monday night before the community meeting at Valley School and made some remarks which the television commentator called "firing the first shot." At the meeting he had an opportunity to confront Fowler, but he did not.

Now he is taking out paid advertisements. What next?

AEA forced to seek funds for other agencies

The politically powerful Alabama Education Association, which frequently disagrees with Governor George Wallace, has found itself thrust unwillingly into the rather strange role of helping Wallace try to find money for other state government functions.

There seems to be little chance that Wallace will get the school tax revenue he is seeking for the urgent needs in Medicaid, Mental Health, The Prisons and Highways.

Even Lieutenant Governor Jere Beasley, who has supported the Governor on most issues, says he is against diverting 12 per cent of the proceeds from the sales and use taxes as Wallace has proposed. And at an informal caucus of most of the 35 members of the Senate, only one voice was heard in defense of the Administration Plan.

But Beasley has warned the Senate at the same time that the Legislature may have to swallow the Wallacesponsored "Relocation of Funds," as his floor leaders call the tax diversion plan, unless the Legislature comes up with a workable substitute.

And, in a sense, the A-E-A is in the same boat.

The education association's executive secretary, Dr. Paul Hubbert, readily conceded, in his appearance before the House Ways and Means Committee that there are critical needs in other areas of government besides the schools.

But he said the state still has a long way to go to provide the kind of school system Alabama should have, and, he warned, to take revenue away from education when so many of the needs are still unmet, would be nothing short of irresponsible.

Still, Hubbert was unwilling to ask the Legislature to reject the administration program without o.fering something in its place.

First, he told the committee, Wallace has "Grossly underestimated" the expected revenue from taxes which support the state's general fund. And he said the state can reasonably expect to receive some 26 million dollars more in federal revenue sharing than the administration is

Together, Hubbert said, the additional revenue in the general fund plus the extra revenue sharing money will give the state 50 million dollars more during the nex two years than the Governor's budget anticipates.

State budget officer James "Jake" Jordan doesn't agree. To go along with the A-E-A plan, he says, would be Hubbert is working now on more detailed recommendations. He says, for instance, that the highway department can get some of its badly needed roadbuilding money from the 42 million dollars it has budgeted for equipment purchases.

Meanwhile, administration floor leaders are reluctant to risk a vote on the tax diversion plan right now.

Medicaid cut-off will affect 4,500

The director of Medicaid in Alabama, Dr. Robert Holzworth says more than 4,500 patients now receiving intermediate care will have to be cut off unless the program is adequately funded next year. He says it will take 56 million dollars to provide adequate service to the approximately 300,000 persons in the state who are eligible for some type of care.

Holzworth says Medicaid is safe through the rest of the current fiscal year because of an emergency appropriation of nine million 600 thousand dollars approved last week by the Legislature. But after the new fiscal year begins October first, he says cutbacks will have to be made unless the funds allocated for that year are adequate. He says it will take 56 million dollars to do the job properly.

The Medicaid director says the state committee on public health has decided to discontinue the intermediate care facilities until adequate funding is available.

Holzworth says patients receiving intermediate care create more of a social than a medical problem. They are mostly elderly, do not have full control of their faculties, and are not really ill. Many of them formerly were being treated in the State's mental hospitals.

Bond issue predicted to transform Mobile into prime shipping port on Gulf Coast

With the passage of a 45 million dollar state docks improvement plan, Alabama officials are pouring fourth a tide of superlatives, and it may raise storm flags at New Orleans and other ports on the Gulf of Mexico.

The Alabama officials, in so many glowing words, say the 45 million dollars will give the state docks at Mobile the impetus needed to eventually sail past New Orleans as the premier port of the Gulf.

Nobody is predicting that king of expansion for a decade or two, but Alabama's State Docks Director Reuben Wheelis captures the lofty sentiments of the future by saying: "I think the port of Mobile can and will become the largest and best port on the Gulf of Mexico and one of the great ports in the world."

Those may be hard words to swallow in New Orleans, which has long been the big, older brother to Mobile and which last year handled more than four times the tonnage that passed through the Alabama State Docks.

But Wheelis and other Alabama officials have legitimate cause for optimism and even New Orleans port officials say the rest of the Gulf will be affected by the waves Alabama makes in charting its role in sea commerce.

The 45 million dollar bond issue which Alabama voters overwhelmingly approved two weeks ago, isn't a one-time, paint- the - decks effort.

Instead, it will help prepare the docks for the Tennessee - Tombigbee Waterway, which is expected to open in 1981 and challenge the Mississippi River as the main shipping artery for the Midwest.

With the Tennessee-Tombigbee entering the Gulf at Mobile, Alabama docks officials predict that the waterway will create the potential for Mobile to take on five times the tonnage that it currently does.

A spokesman for the port of New Orleans concedes that some barge traffice will be diverted from the Mississippi to the Tennessee- Tombigbee. But he says any loss won't be dramatic at New Orleans, which last year handled 136 million tons of cargo while Mobile handled only about 31 million.

W. T. Ryan, publicity director for the port of New Orleans says: "Although the Tennessee- Tombigbee project and the docks improvement will very definitely be taking some business away from New Orleans, we feel that in a way it is strengthening the whole Gulf south and we don't look on it as a total loss."

Ryan says that New Orleans port officials anticipate a potential loss of ten per cent in barge traffic due to the Tennessee- Tombigbee. But he says there is no apprehension over any major diversion of shipping routes.

He says most of the Tennessee-Tombigbee's commerce would be in the Tennessee Valley area, rather than in the American midwest.

But Alabama state representative H. L. "Sonny" Callahan, a Mobile businessman who pushed for the bond issue, says steamship routes will change and that the midwest will be affected.

He says Mobile provides a port 100 miles closer than New Orleans and that the Tennessee- Tombigbee will cut off 300 miles from the typical shipping journey up the Mississippi to the midwest.

Callahan adds: "Mobile is a much more desirable port of call to the steamship companies. In 20 years it will challenge the Mississippi River and the New Orleans port."

The Alabama legislator says that the Tennessee-Tombigbee also will be more advantageous for the shipper because it will have "slack water" instead of the fierce currents of the Mississippi River.

Ryan says this would make a difference to some barges going upriver but the currents help speed the trip towards New Orleans.

Dr. Dave Tiffany, a University of South Alabama professor who researched the Alabama port's economics, says Mobile now has to turn business away because it isn't equipped to handle it. With the planned improvements, however, he says the port is "the last economic frontier" in the Southeast.

To illustrate that such a statement isn't idle chatter, Tiffany and Callahan point to the huge industrial prospects that have begun to rise in the Mobile area. In addition to the Tennessee- Tombigbee and the docks expansion, major oil finds have been made in north Mobile County and an effort is underway to build a deepwater port in the Gulf

The 45 million dollar bond issue will be supervised by a committee, as yet unnamed, which will decide how many, of the bonds will be issued and for what purposes. Callahan says the bonds probably would be sold in 15 million dollar increments over a period of years.

Docks officials have said key priorities include a container facility and expanded wharves, which would cost about 15 million dollars and 13 million dollars for expansion of the grain elevator.

Wheelis says the gran elevator currently handles onepoint-one million bushels while the New Orleans elevator can take about 12 million and the one at Houston ten million. He says the Mobile grain elevator already is being expanded to handle seven million bushels.

The docks director, meanwhile, contends that the Tennessee- Tombigbee will divert tonnage toward Mobile to the extent, he sayd, "I see no reason why we won't be handling cargo off the Mississippi River with barges."

The Alabama docks director, while making statements that might be readily challenged at New Orleans and other Gulf ports, says he wanted all of the South to benefit from increased sea commerce.

Wheelis says, "It's enough for everybody. We just want to get where we can serve this section of the United States.'

And, he adds, almost as a reminder to New Orleans shipping interests, "The Tennessee- Tombigbee serves 23

Annual sessions . . . for better or worse

by Don Wasson

MONTGOMERY - for better or worse, Alabama is going to get a yearly dose of legislativitis.

In approving annual sessions, Alabama voters may have been expressing a note of desperation - "Proponents say it will make for a better legislature so for Heaven's sake, let's try it."

It was odd that voter approval came on a day when the Senate, at least, displayed one of its worst fits of temper tantrums, piqued personalities and ill humors of all The body had frittered away its first seven days in a seldom- equalled showing of how the fine art of lawmaking in Alabama has degenerated over the past several years. Proponents of annual sessions talked about how annual sessions is a "first step," in legislative reform, and it may work out that way. But from the inside, it would appear that annual sessions would have been a good fourth or fifth step. One beneficial result of the vote last Tuesday is that the body can now talk about an annual budget instead of a biennial budget. If push comes to shove, the monetary problems facing the body this year can be set aside until 1976 and perhaps by that time, the economy will not only have "bottomed out" but will have begun a turn upward, which would make a lot of difference in the financing of

But what this legislature absolutely must do it to return, at least in the upper chamber, to the theory that the majority view must prevail.

At the present time, with the inane "5 o'clock" adjournment rule, and the Tuesday and Thursday meeting days rule, any single member of the Senate can bring the entire process to a halt.

For two or three days, Sen. Joe Fine of Russellville did just that, refusing to let committees to report out the bills they had considered. Then when the first calendar came out - a list of bills to be debated, a bill by Fine was on top of the list and Sen. John Baker, perhaps rightly so, blocked action until it was agreed that the Fine bill would not be the first to pass in this session.

To the average tax-paying, legislator- electing, annual session- voter, that little bit of tom-foolery must be difficult to digest. Almost one-fifth of the session gone and nothing much of anything accomplished.

Annual sessions could mean one of two things either we begin to get a better legislature because there will be more time to consider more things carefully, or we get a worse legislature -- candidates seeking and winning election because they feel that annual sessions will afford more opportunity to feed at the public trough or to profit through patronage or power or both.

How the legislature will perform depends, really, on the strength and worthiness of its individual members. There must be some kind of inner reformation which, as yet, has not shown signs of surfacing.

It was interesting to note, too, that Lt. Gov. Jere Beasley felt compelled to call the senators into a headknocking private session to see if the train could not be put back on the tracks. Out of that meeting came Beasley's pronouncement that he was opposed to the governor's plan for diverting Educational Trust Fund Monies to the General

Which proves that Beasley isn't exactly afraid to knock heads with the governor now. With Wallace no longer a threat as a candidate, Beasley can better afford to openly oppose the governor's program. That doesn't seem to be consistent with campaign pledges that his aim was "to help the governor" but then this is politics and in politics, anything goes.

Under the Courthouse. Dome

Several counties in Alabama have adopted a law requiring re-identification for a duly qualified voter. It is believed, if this is done, that a more accurate list of the electorate is made possible.

Jefferson County has such a legal requirement. In looking over a copy of the Centerville Press, we find a number of names of citizens in Bibb County who have failed to re-identify themselves. These citizens' names have been published requesting them to re-identify themselves before July 14 in order to be a qualified voter in Bibb

It has been suggested by some officials in charge of "purging" the poll list for Shelby County that this legal requirement of re-identification might be good to put into effect. The poll list as it now stands in this county numbers approximately 28,000. There are some names of former citizens who, years ago, moved away from Shelby County. Others include names of citizens who have died since the last publication of the list of eligible voters. Perhaps this re-identification suggestion might be worth consideration for this county. The plan might also promote a more accurate list of eligible voters before the next election takes

Randolph M. Fowler, son of Judge and Mrs. Conrad M. Fowler holds the distinction of being one of the few law students to be selected for membership in the University of Alabama Law School Chapter of Order of the Coif. This is a special honor which comes only to a very small number of

The Order of the Coif is the highest academic honor the Law School can bestow.

The Shelby County Commission had one of its longest meetings of the year on Monday, June 9. The meeting began at 9:00 and adjourned at 5:30. The Commission meets regularly on the second and fourth Mondays of each month. Each meeting is opened to the public and, usually, each meeting is attended by representatives of the press.

Cullman County was recently added to the list of counties that have sent a delegation to visit Shelby County and seek information about the way the County Highway Department is organized and functions. Shelby County operates under a unit system provided by a local act drafted by Columbiana attorney Frank Head when he was in the legislature in 1949. The Shelby County Highway Department and the county road system are looked upon as models for county operations in Alabama. From three to five such delegations have visited Shelby County each year over the past six years.

From this day forth, there will be no question regarding with whom you are dealing in the courthouse. Each official, clerk and secretary now wear name plates.

It is reported that J. C. Walton, custodian of the courthouse for the past 25 years, is a hospital patient awaiting surgery. Jimmy Thompson is now in charge of this work during his absence.

The Board of Registrars met Monday and Tuesday in the courthouse and registered one of the largest number of future voters for one day than has heretofore been done. Some 30 names were added Monday - one of the busiest days the Board has experienced. Tuesday was also a good day for registration. . . . . .

Ratification of the annual sessions amendment for the Legislature may bring about another election law change.

A bill has been introduced to start future regular sessions of the Legislature on the first Tuesday in February instead of the first Tuesday in May. And it appears to have a good chance to pass. The sponsor, Senator Bill King of Huntsville, says he has pledges of support from 26 of the 35 members of the senate.

Ballot change to end elector fence jumping

The Legislature has already made one election law change this year which will have a significant effect in Alabama. There may be others.

During the last of the three recent special sessions, the House and Senate enacted legislation to put the names of Presidential candidates on the ballot for the first time.

Hopefully, it will eliminate much of the confusion in past elections when the people voted only for presidential electors who might or might not support the party ticket. Alabama witnessed one rebellion after another against the National Democratic party in the 20 years beginning in 1948. There were times when the voters could not cast their ballots for the Democratic party nominee because the electors were committed to support Governor George Wallace or someone else. And it is the electors who vote for the entire state when they cast their ballots in the electoral college. It is then and only then that the President is elected. Because the courts have held that electors can vote for anyone they choose, it was a simple matter for those nominated in the Democratic Primary to turn against the National Party ticket.

They did in 1948, when Alabama's electoral votes went to the Thurmond- Wright States Right Ticket ... again in 1960 when the electoral vote was split between the late President Kennedy and Senator Harry Byrd of Virginia ... and again in 1968 when the electors who ran as regular Democrats voted for Wallace, the American Party nominee.

That has been changed now. Under the new law, the people will vote directly for the Presidential candidates, who in turn will choose their own electors.

Oily Skin Determining oily skin - signs of oily skin are usually an all- over shiny look, and/ or a rough texture with blackheads and enlarged pores. The oily residue most frequently appears in profusion on the chin, nose and forehead, commonly known as the "T" zone. The oily skin is more prone to developing acne and whiteheads. But the blame for these problems cannot be put solely on the fact that the skin is oily. Any combination of conditions may be to blame, such as improper cleansing, hormonal imbalance, nerves, poor diet, even humid weather. A good treatment is necessary for this skin type. Keeping the skin in an "acid balanced" condition is essential. This prevents susceptibility to invading bacteria which can contribute to infection.

Treatment procedure for oily

OPEN LETTER TO THE CITIZENS OF SHELBY COUNTY FROM SHERIFF C. P. "RED" WALKER, SHELBY COUNTY

I appeared before the Shelby County Commission Monday, June 9th, in reference to a petition signed by some 150 citizens from the northern portion of Shelby County. The petition was in reference to more deputies and the possibility of a sub-station being located in that area. Shelby County has been plagued with burglaries, robberies, murders and, more particularly, drugs among our young people. There was an article in the newspaper about a meeting which Mr. Conrad Fowler has scheduled for Monday night, June 16th, 1975. I had no knowledge of this meeting until reading it in the newspaper nor was I consulted before the scheduling of this meeting. Due to a previous commitment it is almost an impossibility for me to attend the meeting on the 16th. During this meeting on the 9th of June I received a very cold reception and was informed that nothing would be done regarding the petition but that the Commission felt that the citizens deserved an explanation and therefore scheduled a meeting on the 16th of June. It seems o be an act of futility. I asked the Commission if they had discussed it and they said that they had talked about it, and the only remark of record was from Mr. Ned Bearden who said, "Well they get a burglary or two, and they get overly excited." After that statement the Commission continued the meeting by nominating Mr. Blalock and the county engineer for honors in the State Association of County Commissioners and approving other bills to be paid such as political advertisements in various magazines and so forth. I was not even thanked for appearing before the County Commission in regard to this matter; nor was I assured that the Sheriff's Department and the County Commission would discuss it later.

I say to you, the people of Shelby County, that from this day forward the Sheriff's Department will be at war against crimes within Shelby County of armed robbery, burglary, gambling, drugs or whatever. I can assure you that our efforts will be without the support of the chairman of the County Commission. He has worked against the Sheriff's Office for the 16 years I have been in this office. Our deputies are doing all that they are capable of doing during the hours of the day and night, but we are going to continue to go the extra mile. At this time we are overextended in this office on the disappearance and suspected murder of Guy Kirby. It has taxed the capabilities of this office, running down leads (both true and false) in this case and at the same time we have been having burglaries all over the county and a serious armed robbery on U.S. 280. Two men with ski masks armed with pistols, in the middle of the night, robbed Mr. and Mrs. J. O. Raines. In addition to other serious crimes within this county we have had three attempted murders this week, besides the election to poll. We have some 800 square miles of Shelby County to patrol and on Election Day or during an emergency situation or appearances in the court practically the entire Sheriff's 'ffice is spread too thin to properly patrol Shelby County as it should be patrolled.

The good people of Shelby County should insist that Mr. Conrad Fowler take a stand for law enforcement rather than his anti-law enforcement stance. He has fought every major issue on law enforcement since I have been sheriff of this county; and we cannot meet the needs of the people of this county unless we have the support and cooperation of Mr. Fowler and the County Commission. However, I will go to the State Legislature as I have in the past, in almost every issue to get pay raises and equipment that is needed in the Sheriff's Department. The majority of our law enforcement equipment has come through the Legislature or through grants obtained by the sheriff; and the Sheriff's Department now desperately needs additional deputies and cars for better law enforcement in Shelby County.

In closing, I say to you, the Sheriff's Office is dedicated and pledged to war on crime within this county; and you will see these efforts, even though it means working our men beyond their capabilities which we are already doing. We implore your support; that you let Mr. Fowler, as chairman of the County Commission, know what you want and deserve, and also that you let the courts in this county and state know that you want convictions when criminals are arrested.

Sincerely

"Red" Walker, Sheriff

Inflation isn't curbing her family's vacation, said Elizabeth Stowe, a teacher at Thompson Elementary School. "We always take it the economical way, whether there is a depression or not -- we camp," she revealed. The Smoky Mountains are their favorite vacation spot, she continued, saying, "We haven't missed but one year there, so we could not pass it up."
